Corydon auctions school building

■ Sale brings $65,000; small profit cleared by city

By Frank Boyett

The city of Corydon successfully auctioned its old school Friday, clearing a few thousand dollars more than it owed on the building.

The city still owed $62,164 on the school property at 635 Main St., but had paid $125,000 for it when it purchased it from Corydon Missionary Baptist Church in October of 2010. The church had bought the property for $21,000 from the Henderson County School District in September of 1994, according to deeds at the Henderson County Clerk's Office.

"We're happy with the sale of the building," said Mayor Philip Brewster Jr. "It's cost this community a lot." He said he wishes the city could have kept it, but "it's just too big and the city of Corydon can't handle this building."

"A heavy weight has been lifted off our back. There are other things to still conquer here in Corydon, but I'm doing my best to keep moving forward."

The building had been the focal point of much controversy during the previous city administration.

Corydon City Council members Brenda K. Gibson, Kristi Phillips, James M. Clement were also at the auction, which was attended by about 50 people.

The bidding started out at $50,000, but stalled out at $65,000 in less than a minute, and auctioneer Kevin Herron sold it to Brett Thurmond for that amount. "I don't know," Thurmond replied when asked what he intends with the property. He said one possibility is allowing his mother to hold wedding receptions there.

President's new agenda appearing fairly liberal

By Julie Pace
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — From gun control to gay rights, President Barack Obama's second-term agenda is shaping up as an unabashedly liberal wish list.

In less than a week, he's vowed to tackle climate change and protect government entitlements. His administration has lifted a ban on women in combat and expanded opportunities for disabled students.

Proposals for stricter gun laws have already been unveiled, and plans for comprehensive immigration reform, including a pathway to citizenship for millions of illegal immigrants, are coming next week.

Obama's full embrace of such an agenda suggests a president both freed for

Slick, icy roads plague area

A Kentucky Transportation Cabinet Muhlenberg County crew truck slid off the road into a ditch while it was spreading salt on a slick spot on Kentucky 2551 in the Bremen area Friday morning. ■ Numerous wrecks, slide-offs reported Light freezing rain compounded by very cold temperatures laid down enough ice on many state, county and city roads early Friday morning in Henderson County to cause multiple vehicle crashes and slide-offs.

No serious injuries were reported.

Henderson County School District officials said the slick conditions occurred after school buses were en route to pick up students, therefore classes were not canceled on Friday.

"We had four individuals on the roads (beginning at) 3:45 a.m.," said Keegan O'Daniel, director of transportation. "We ran into situations that at 4 a.m., 5 a.m. and 5:30 a.m., the roads were wet but not freezing. The freezing didn't start until around 6 a.m., and the buses were already on the road."

"We felt like since we have professional and safe drivers, that as long as they (traveled) slowly, it would be OK," O'Daniel said. "It just came down to timing. At 5 a.m., Union County students were going to school. At 5:30 a.m., they weren't. At 6 a.m. (in Henderson County) (road conditions) started to deteriorate."

Friday classes were canceled for both Union and Webster counties.

O'Daniel said many precautions were taken to assist Henderson County school bus drivers in transporting students safely to school.

"We made sure that in no way the drivers did anything unsafe," he said.

Some students, he said, were in areas where the roads were particularly treacherous. "So district administrators went out in school board 4x4 vehicles" to pick up students.

"Everyone who was transported by school bus or school board vehicles were transported safely," he said.

"It was a unique day ... I understand the frustrations, but it wasn't a day taken lightly," O'Daniel said.

As temperatures on Friday moved to above freezing, road conditions improved.

However, Henderson County Sheriff's Lt. Keith Berry said at the height of the freeze, sheriff's deputies worked roughly 12 vehicle accidents and motorist assists where vehicles slid off the roads.

School's asbestos situation uncertain

■ Test sample results not back

Gleaner staff

As of Friday evening, it was still uncertain whether asbestos exists in an older wing at South Heights Elementary School and whether school would resume there on Monday.

According to Danielle Crafton, public information officer for the Henderson County School District, test results from samples taken at the school Friday were not yet back as of late Friday afternoon.

Assistant Superintendent Marganna Stanley said those with the Environmental Protection Agency and P.A.C.E. Field Services, a certified contractor in Evansville, spent most of the day Friday at the school taking samples. She said they didn't leave until early afternoon on Friday.

Crafton and Stanley said parents of South Heights students would receive a

Steel trusses at Roberts Stadium collapse ... a little early

By John Martin
Scripps Newspapers

Sixteen connected steel trusses at Roberts Stadium were expected to come down one-by-one Friday, but instead, the structure collapsed at once, City-County Building Authority Director David Rector said.

No one was hurt at the demolition site. Klenck Co. of Evansville is the demolition project’s lead contractor.

Rector said workers were torching through each of the 16 beams, and they were expected to fall in a manner similar to dominoes. But as workers were torching the sixth beam, the stadium’s entire frame buckled and came to the ground.

Although the process Friday did not go as planned, the cost and schedule of the demolition project is unchanged. City officials say the razing and land refill could be complete by early May, which was the time frame set last year by the Board of Park Commissioners.

About 1,000 tons of steel from Roberts Stadium have been salvaged for recycling thus far, Rector said.

Roberts was used for sports, entertainment and exposition shows in Evansville from 1956 to 2011. The administration of Mayor Lloyd Winnecke plans to transition the stadium site into an expansive park over the next several years.

Law: Open-carry firearms allowed in public facilities

■ But local governments can still ban concealed weapons

FRANKFORT – Firearms that are openly displayed can now be carried into facilities that are owned by municipalities.

The Courier-Journal reports that a revision to state law approved last year by legislators is now subject to enforcement. The change specifies that “local governments can’t regulate firearms.”

That means people can openly carry the weapons into facilities that are owned by municipalities, such as libraries, parks, the zoo and city halls. Local governments can ban concealed weapons under another state law.

(The city of Henderson on Tuesday passed first reading of an ordinance that would ban concealed carry of weapons inside the local city building, but dropped the issue before second reading on Thursday, with officials saying more study on the issue was needed.)

Guns are banned in some facilities under state law, such as schools, jails and prisons. In addition, private businesses can still ban firearms.

The measure has caused consternation in some areas.

Hardin County Attorney Jenny Oldham says officials there have approved an ordinance to ban concealed guns from buildings owned by the county. And she says officials are seeking clarification from the state attorney general’s office on whether guns must be allowed at Hardin Memorial Hospital or if it is exempt because it is a health care facility.

Metro Louisville officials are reviewing all policies referencing firearms.

“We have serious concerns about the safety implications for our employees of metro government and the public who comes into these buildings,” said Jefferson County Attorney Mike O’Connell, whose office making sure local policies comply with state law.

The city will allow those openly carrying guns into its facilities, but Chris Poynter, a spokesman for Mayor Greg Fischer, said other weapons aren’t allowed — “even though you can bring guns, you can’t bring knives,” Poynter said.

“We have concerns for the safety of our workers,” said Poynter, who noted that some people get angry due to the work of government officials. “To be able to come to the office with a gun is disconcerting to some of our employees. But the law seems quite clear on that.”

Louisville Zoo Director John Walczak said signs asking patrons to return any weapons to vehicles have been removed and workers are being trained on how to monitor the facility if a firearm is brought in.

Louisville Free Public Library Director Craig Buthod said he doesn’t think the law will affect that facility much.

Kentucky court overturns Atmos Energy lawsuit

■ Most landowners' claims of unpaid royalties dismissed

By Brett Barrouquere
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE — The Kentucky Court of Appeals on Friday overturned a $24.7 million jury verdict against Texas-based Atmos Energy stemming from a lawsuit by landowners who claimed they didn't get their rightful royalties from an oil and gas project.

A unanimous three-judge panel dismissed most of the claims brought by the landowners, including allegations that Atmos Energy of Dallas failed to pay promised royalties for drilling on their lands. The court ordered a new trial for the estate of one landowner.

Judge Joy A. Moore, writing for the court, concluded that the landowners failed to make a case against Atmos Energy on several fronts. The landowners argued that they did not receive royalties from the gas and oil produced on their lands. Moore noted that, under Kentucky law, landowners have no claim to own oil and gas found under their property once a lease is signed — the product belongs to the person who signed the lease to drill.

"Therefore, landowners had no ownership rights in the gas removed from their property and, to the extent that their conversion claim relates to that gas, their claim against Atmos fails as a matter of law," wrote Moore, who was joined by judges Donna L. Dixon and Glenn Acree.

An Edmonson County jury in 2010 awarded about $7.7 million to the landowners, and the rest to a company owned by Robert Thorpe, which acted as a third-party producer in the project.

The jury initially awarded $31.35 million, but post-trial motions knocked $7 million off the final judgment.

The case stems from a series of gas rights deals signed by the landowners in southern Kentucky. The landowners initially signed royalty contracts with two attorneys and an entity known as Park City. Park City later reached an agreement with Atmos Energy, which did the drilling and distributed the money.

Atmos overestimated the amount of gas in the fields, which produced for about a year in 2008 and 2009, but not nearly in the quantities projected by the company.

On appeal, Atmos argued that there were issues with jury selection and the admission of evidence or at least it deserved a reduction in the amount of damages.

The landowners also appealed, saying they were entitled to a greater amount of punitive damages.

Moore found that the landowners argued they did not receive the royalty specified in their oil and gas leases because of the relationship between Atmos Energy and Resource Energy Technologies, one of the companies handling the drilling and sold oil and gas to an arm of Atmos Energy.

When the promised royalties didn't come through, the landowners sued for fraud.

Numerous wrecks reported on slick state roads Friday

■ Portion of I-65 closed due to unsafe conditions

By Bruce Schreiner and Brett Barrouquere
Associated Press

ELIZABETHTOWN — Wide swaths of Kentucky were glazed with ice early Friday that caused numerous wrecks, including a 10-vehicle pileup and a Greyhound bus that slid off a slick interstate. Even walking was hazardous with sleet and freezing rain coating sidewalks.

A stretch of Interstate 65 was shut down because of the hazardous conditions.

"It's as slick as can be," said truck stop employee Bobby Loyall, whose usual 20-minute commute turned into a perilous hour-long crawl.

A Greyhound bus with 19 passengers slid off I-65 at Cave City when the driver tried to brake to avoid stopped vehicles, but no injuries were reported, Greyhound spokesman Timothy Stokes said. State police reported one injury that appeared to be minor.

Stokes said the bus originated in Nashville, Tenn., and was headed to Cincinnati. A replacement bus was being sent to pick up the passengers, he said.

Police said there were several accidents in the Elizabethtown area besides the 10-vehicle pileup south of town on I-65.

Kentucky Transportation Cabinet spokesman Chris Jessie in Elizabethtown said freezing rain continued to fall Friday morning, compounding hazardous road conditions. The hardest hit roads were in Grayson, Hart, LaRue and Green counties.

Business was slow at a truck stop in Hardin County in central Kentucky where roads were coated with ice.

"We've got a few wrecks on I-65 north and south here at Glendale and the interstate is closed down both ways and problems on some of the hills with trucks making them up on (US 31 West)," Loyall said. Hart County Sheriff Boston Hensley said the front end of his vehicle slid into the ditch as he tried to make his way on a slick road.

"I've had a deputy that's been in the ditch," he said. "I've got one that can't get out of his drive."

In southeastern Kentucky, residents were urged to stay off icy roads in Laurel County. Sheriff John Root said all of the county's roads were covered in ice, including Interstate 75 and the Hal Rogers Parkway.

The two fairly weak systems "scooting by" to the north and south of Louisville have been causing the winter weather, said Ron Steve, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Louisville.

NiSource given OK to upgrade pipelines

The Associated Press

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — The parent of Columbia Gas Transmission said Friday it has won federal approval for a plan to spend $300 million a year through 2017 on improvements to its Appalachian pipeline system.

Indiana-based NiSource Inc. said the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission approved the plan for Columbia Gas Transmission's lines in West Virginia, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland and Kentucky. Columbia Chief Executive Officer Jimmy Staton says the $1.5 billion investment will help ensure safer, more reliable pipeline infrastructure for customers and the communities across the region.

The plan stems from a consumer settlement that is unrelated to the December explosion of a Columbia transmission line near Sissonville that destroyed several homes but could help prevent similar incidents.

NiSource said it will also spend $100 million on maintenance, and its long-term plan is to invest about $4 billion over 10 to 15 years.

The work includes replacing about 1,000 miles of transmission lines, including 400 in the first five years, and upgrading 50 critical compressor units. Staton said the work also involves improving Columbia's ability to perform state-of-the-art maintenance and inspections without interrupting service.

Former high school coach enters plea

HARTFORD — A former high school basketball coach in western Kentucky has pleaded guilty to unlawful transaction with a minor.

The Messenger-Inquirer reports Nathan E. Phelps, who coached girls' basketball at Ohio County High School in 2010 when he was accused by police of having sexual contact with a 15-year-old girl, entered the plea Thursday. The agreement calls for him to be on probation for two years.

Originally, Phelps faced a felony charge of first-degree unlawful transaction with a minor, illegal sex act, victim under age 16. He pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor.

In addition to probation, Phelps must receive psychological counseling and cannot work at a school without getting permission from the Commonwealth Attorney's office.

Explosion destroys Kentucky home

NEWPORT — Fire officials in northern Kentucky say an apparent natural gas explosion and fire have leveled a home in Newport.

Newport fire Capt. Phil Dietz says three people were in the house when the explosion ripped through the structure about 4:30 a.m. EST Friday. He says two of the residents were taken to University Hospital in Cincinnati and one was in critical condition. Their names have not been released.

Dietz says the home was engulfed in flames when firefighters arrived.

He says debris was scattered in the street and pieces of the home were lodged in trees. The only things left in the frame home were the foundation and chimney. He says neighboring homes did not appear to be damaged.

Fire investigators are at the scene.

Hatfield McCoy trail acquires new sites

PIKEVILLE — New sites are being added to the Hatfield McCoy GeoTrail in eastern Kentucky and southwest West Virginia for the second annual geocaching event in the area late this summer.

The GeoTrail website says the event is scheduled for Aug. 31. Last year, more than 500 people from 20 different states attended.

This year's event will again feature a "Stolen Pig Roast." Some of the new sites on the trail will be the grave of Ellison Hatfield and Goldies Hardware.

The global pastime of geocaching is a modern-day version of treasure hunting done with smartphones and other devices.

The trail is a partnership between the Tug Valley Chamber of Commerce in Williamson, W.Va., and Tour Pike County in Pikeville, Ky.

Last year, it featured 15 caches.

Maine distiller moving to Kentucky

LEWISTON, Maine — A vodka and rum distillery in Maine owned by the maker of Jim Beam bourbon is closing down and eliminating about 160 jobs.

Beam Inc. announced Thursday that production at its Lewiston plant will gradually be phased out over the next year and operations moved to Frankfort, Ky. The transition is expected to be complete in April 2014.

The Lewiston plant makes Pinnacle vodka and Calico Jack rum. The Maine plant's 160 employees were told of the decision Thursday.

Congress sets work schedule to be envied

The new Congress has a lot before it — the regular business of government, which in any case it rarely finishes; debt reduction; tax reform; getting a grip on medical costs; realigning our defense posture to meet new threats; and reviving the economy to meet global competition.

You would think these tasks would be enough to keep Congress working day and night.

You would be wrong.

Very wrong.

House Majority Leader Eric Cantor has published the House calendar for this year (MajorityLeader.gov), and using the word “leisurely” is to inflict an injustice on the concept of lassitude.

For what comfort it's worth, no member of Congress will die from overwork this year.

The average American works at his or her real-world job just over 40 hours a week and 48 to 50 weeks a year.

The House this year — the Senate tends to closely follow suit — plans to work 33 weeks, most of them four-day weeks (there are no five-day weeks on the calendar) for a total of 122 days.

This month the House will work one two-day week and two three-day weeks.

And the first day and last day of the weeks tend to be half-days to give the lawmakers more travel time.

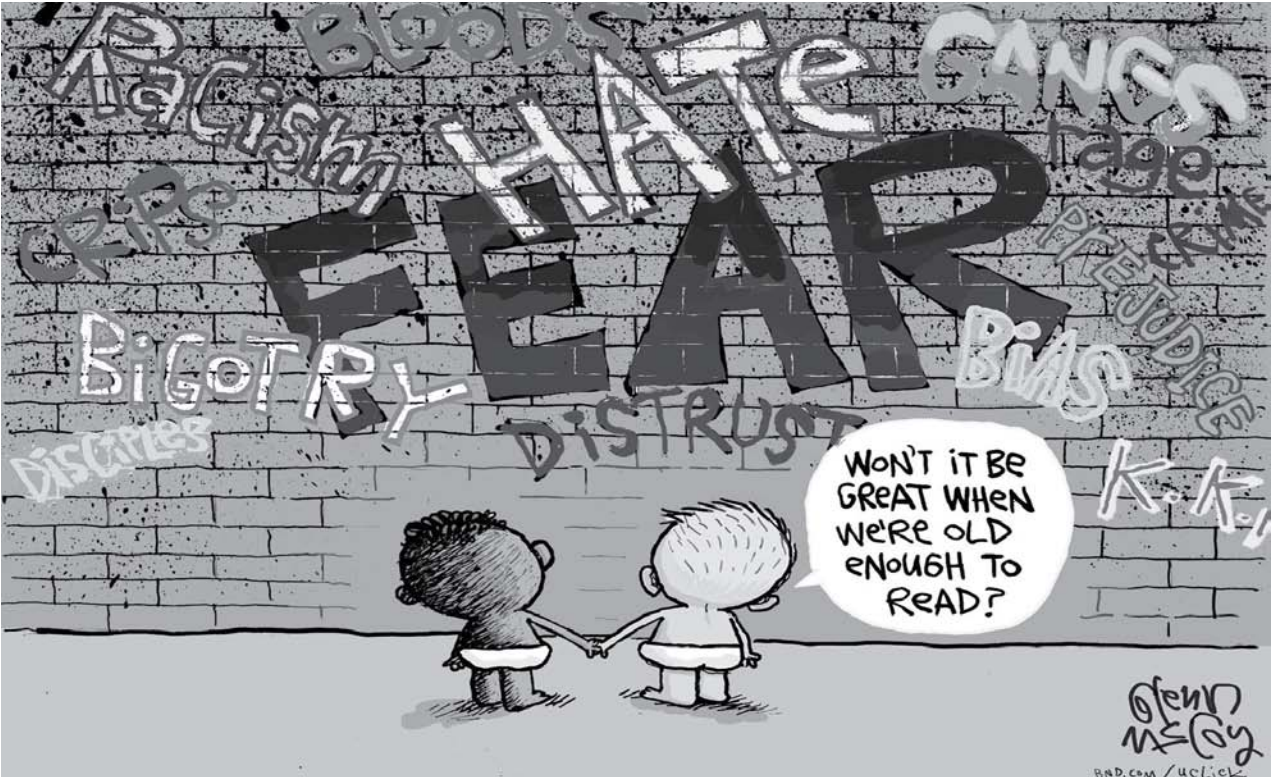

The House will decompress from its herculean labors by working only eight days in November and eight days in December.

(Good thing they'll have some time during the holidays to rest up!)

That pales in comparison to August when the House plans two days of work before knocking off for the six weeks from Aug. 3 to Sept. 9.

The House leadership likes to describe this downtime as “district work periods” and they are if you count fund-raising and getting a running start on the next election as work.

Rather inconveniently, the Founding Fathers of this country and the Constitution put the real work of Congress in Washington and assumed the members would show up in the capital to do it and stay there until it was done.

Wildcats fan has request for local TV weatherman

This is a plea to that yappin' TV weatherman Wayne Hart, who neither breathes nor shuts up as he yaps nonstop about the coming of bad weather, which seldom even happens.

It's bad enough to watch a losing Kentucky Wildcat game, especially when it's a one-man beat up (this time, thanks to Mr. Elston Turner); but then what happens? The screen blinks and here comes the yapper!

All Mr. Yapper needs to do is cut the drama and say severe weather is approaching Southern Illinois, Southern Indiana and Western Kentucky so grab your whatevers and hide under the bed, then Mr. Yapper needs to get the yap out of sight.

Or run one of those annoying, never-ending trailers at the bottom of the screen. We Wildcatters do not like any game interrupted, period.

So Mr. Yapper, shut the yap up.

More gun-control laws won't help stop the killings

I have been watching the goings-ons of the Newtown shootings and related issues that have the country saddened and heartbroken. My heart and prayers go out to all the families that went through this tragedy.

Now the president and vice president want more gun control, for which I feel at this time is not needed. The president and vice president don't want you to own guns to start with, they are anti-gun, have always been, always will be.

If you think they are on your side, well they are not.

I still say guns should never, ever, be taken away from law-abiding citizens. I see where the governor of New York and the mayor of New York passed a law for more gun control, of course they are anti-gun people also.

People who own guns and have permits to carry guns, who are law-abiding citizens, the Second Amendment guarantees this right. I am a member of the NRA and I am proud to be a member. They stand up for gun owners and are not bullies as the media has portrayed them to be.

Criminals and the mentally ill will get guns no matter how much the president and vice president want more gun control. The states and the U.S. government have laws about gun ownership, some of it is good, some of it is bad.

I think the NRA had it right — schools need armed professional guards, those who are qualified for this.

The Newtown citizens want justice. I understand this, but more gun control is not the answer at this time.

Look at the gang shootings in Chicago. The police are doing everything they can to stop it, but it still goes on and on. The gang members and/or thugs are still getting guns one way or another.

So Mr. President/Vice President, if you think passing more gun control is going to help you, well it's not ...

May God bless America.

Death penalty option allows justice for victims' families

A bill that would abolish the death penalty would be like taking justice away from the families of innocent murder victims. It also would increase murder crimes in America.

If the punishment for this crime was carried out swiftly, it would not be as costly as it is now by keeping these evil-doers on death row for years!

I believe in the death penalty, for I think the crime should be a swift punishment to protect the innocent and their families.

I know this might sound harsh to some people, but think about the good for all the people! How do victims feel? Can anyone bring back their loved ones who are killed?

Are we not caring enough to support laws that are made to keep this crime from happening? Do we not want justice in our land?

Some people will say God says, “Vengeance is mine.” There is the law of God and there is the law of the land. We are told we must obey the law of God and obey the law of the government as long as it does not go against the law of God.

It is not against the law of God to make laws that call for justice in our land. He approved of laws that would punish evil-doers, for he calls for a nation that loves righteousness.

A death penalty should be kept for the worst and most violent crimes. This law would make a country strong with less crime and make more goodness in our state and country.

What is wrong with the death penalty is that it is not done swiftly. There should not be anyone on the death roll in prison for a year! This is the only thing that should be changed, a swift punishment!

God cares for the innocent people who are victims and so do I. That is why we need laws that protect the innocent and will help to abolish this evil crime from happening over and over again. It will help us all to feel safe with less crime.

God bless America.

Another of Armstrong's victims: Postal Service

By Roy Pullam
Special to the Gleaner

Yesterday on the Charlie Rose show there were a panel of experts talking about the Lance Armstrong situation. Four of the five guests said that they do not think he could have ever won without blood doping. They said he was a “so so” rider before exploding to world prominence just like Sammy Sosa did in baseball.

Lance Armstrong was a wonderful hero; he beat cancer to reclaim glory and the yellow shirt. Millions of Americans who did not give a fig for bike racing were watching every leg of the race across the body of France. Even when he left the woman who nursed him back to health for Sheryl Crow, America closed its eyes as the pedestal began to crumble.

Well, finally he got caught and dishonored, but not just him, the American postal system.

At the height of his popularity, I wondered why the USPS was sponsoring him?

I bet a good total would a hundred out of the Henderson County population can name another bicycle race than the Tour De France. In the lean time when our postal system is losing 5b per year, whose bright idea was it to sponsor an expensive team in splendid surroundings for ten years?

How could those managers raise postage nearly every year, plead poverty, close offices, reduce staff and pour money into a sport that few in America enjoyed? Did they think the French would buy more postage stamps?

In the darkness here on North Elm Street I look in the tired face of my mailman. My route is the second he has run that day. It doesn't matter that my street is one of the busiest in Henderson, it doesn't matter that he has been forced to work another killer shift and it doesn't matter that every time someone retires they never get replaced.

With sweeping closing of mail service offices, he has to be willing to go and not complain. By the way, he is an excellent public servant.

Then there is the matter of the post office itself. Every time I go to the local one, I find a line backed up to the door with one service person most times at the counter.

I wait as the various businesses pick up their tubs of mail, get dozens of packages stamped, write checks and take care of other details. The line doesn't move. We all get angry and frustrated, but it is not at the right people. The individual at the window is doing the best he can.

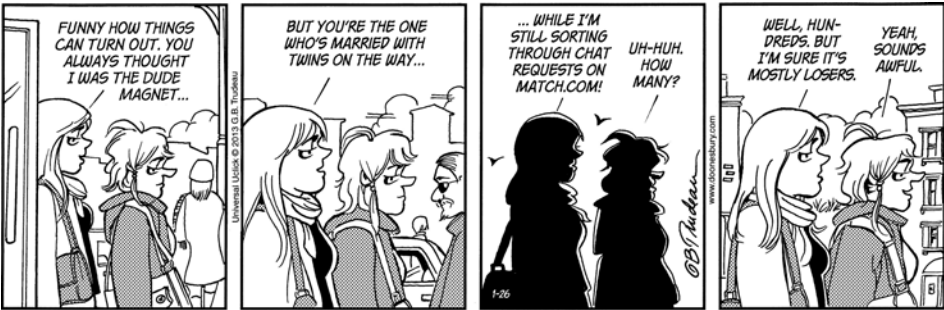

So what should be done? Maybe the people who funded Armstrong need to be fired. Maybe we ought to sue to get some of our money from the Armstrong team, the testing agency and the international cycling association that turned a blind eye.

Since it is a government agency, we might bring criminal charges for fraud.

Getting the money back would not get the egg off the faces of the postal system, but it might say to the countless workers who are so exhausted at the end of the day that the postal system can be taken serious when it asks them to make so many sacrifices.

Chandra Levy case returns to spotlight

By Eric Tucker
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—A judge has been holding secret hearings in the case of the man convicted in the 2001 killing of Chandra Levy, the latest twist in a high-profile murder investigation that went unsolved for years and captured public attention because of the intern's relationship with a California congressman.

The meetings, held sporadically behind closed doors at the courthouse over the last several weeks, could signal potential problems for the prosecution in a decade-long case that seemed resolved with the 2010 conviction of Ingmar Guandique. The illegal immigrant from El Salvador is now serving a 60-year prison sentence in her death.

Authorities acknowledged at the outset of the case that they had no DNA evidence or witnesses linking Guandique to the crime, building their case instead around a jailhouse informant who testified that Guandique had confided in him that he had killed Levy. They also said the attack on Levy fit a pattern of attacks by Guandique on other female joggers in the same location where Levy went missing.

Guandique, who was already imprisoned for those attacks when he was accused in Levy's death, professed innocence at his sentencing hearing.

Neither prosecutors nor defense lawyers have revealed the purpose of the meetings, which court records show have been placed under seal by a judge.

Roe v. Wade as divisive on its 40th anniversary

By Eric Tucker
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Thousands of anti-abortion demonstrators marched through Washington to the steps of the U.S. Supreme Court on Friday to protest the landmark decision that legalized abortion.

The annual event took on added significance for many in the crowd since it coincided with the 40th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court decision that created a constitutional right to abortion in some circumstances. The demonstrators, carrying signs with messages such as "Defend Life" and "Defund Planned Parenthood," shouted chants including "Hey, Hey, Ho, Ho, Roe v. Wade has got to go." They packed the National Mall and surrounding streets for the March of Life.

"I just felt this 40th year marked a huge anniversary for the law," said one demonstrator, Pam Tino, 52, of Easton, Mass., who also participated several years ago. "Forty is a very important year in the Bible as well, in terms of years in the desert. And I just felt like maybe this year that was going to be something miraculous that might happen. We might see something going forward with the cause."

The large turnout reflected the ongoing relevance of the abortion debate four decades after the decision.

It remains a divisive issue with no dramatic shift in viewpoint on either side; a new Pew Research Center poll finds 63 percent of U.S. adults opposed to overturning Roe, compared to 60 percent in 1992. Earlier this week, abortion opponents marked the anniversary with workshops, prayers and calls for more limits on abortion rights. And even as Obama this week reaffirmed his commitment to "reproductive freedom," state legislatures continue to consider varied restrictions on a woman's ability to receive an abortion.

Among the speakers at Friday's rally was Rick Santorum, the staunch abortion opponent who unsuccessfully sought the Republican presidential nomination.

He recalled the love and support the country showed for his young daughter, Bella, who was born with a serious genetic condition.

"We all know that death is never better — never better. Really what it's about is saying is it would be easier for us, not better for her," he said. "And I'm here to tell you ... Bella is better for us and we are better because of Bella."

Flu cases declining except in West

New government figures show that flu cases seem to be leveling off nationwide. Flu activity is declining in most regions although still rising in the West.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says hospitalizations and deaths spiked again last week, especially among the elderly. The CDC says quick treatment with antiviral medicines is important, in particular for the very young or old. The season's first flu case resistant to treatment with Tamiflu was reported Friday.

Eight more children have died from the flu, bringing this season's total pediatric deaths to 37. About 100 children die in an average flu season.

There is still vaccine available although it may be hard to find. The CDC has a website that can help.

Images of N. Korea indicate nuke test

WASHINGTON—Recent satellite photos show North Korea could be almost ready to carry out its threat to conduct a nuclear test, a U.S. research institute said Friday.

The images of the Punggye-ri site, where nuclear tests were conducted in 2006 and 2009, reveal that during the past month, roads have been kept clear of snow and that North Koreans may have been sealing the tunnel into a mountainside where a nuclear device would be detonated.

But it remains difficult to discern North Korea's true intentions, as a test would be conducted underground.

The latest image was taken Wednesday.

Case of teen rape could be open trial

STEUBENVILLE—An attorney for one of two Ohio high school football players charged with raping a 16-year-old girl withdrew his motion to close the trial Friday, leaving the judge to hear arguments on the issue despite not having the motion before him and not planning an immediate ruling.

Defense attorney Walter Madison previously raised concerns that an open trial could lead to potential witnesses on his client's behalf being intimidated following intense publicity and social media commentary about the case. Madison said after the hearing that he believes the related motion to move the trial out of Jefferson County to reduce the possibility of witness intimidation or harassment would address his initial concerns about closing the trial.

Dolphin swims into polluted water, dies

NEW YORK—A wayward dolphin that swam into a polluted New York City canal has died.

The Riverhead Foundation for Marine Research and Preservation says the dolphin died Friday evening. It doesn't know how the dolphin died.

In frigid weather, the dolphin wandered into the Gowanus Canal on Friday.

The dolphin appeared to be about 7 feet long. It surfaced periodically and shook black gunk from its snout in the dirty water.

Experts had hoped the dolphin would free itself from the area during the evening's high tide.

Offensive escalates against rebels

Syria's army unleashed a barrage of rocket and artillery fire on rebel-held areas in a central province Friday as part of a widening offensive against fighters seeking to oust President Bashar Assad. At least 140 people were killed in fighting nationwide, according to activist groups.

The United Nations said a record number of Syrians streamed into Jordan this month, doubling the population of the kingdom's already-cramped refugee camp to 65,000. Over 30,000 people arrived in Zaatari in January — 6,000 in the past two days alone, the U.N. said.

The newcomers are mostly families, women, children and elderly who fled from southern Syria, said Melissa Fleming, spokeswoman for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. She said the UNHCR was working with the Jordanian government to open a second major camp nearby by the end of this month.

IRAQ

Protesters killed amid rally violence

BAGHDAD—Iraqi troops opened fire on stone-throwing Sunni demonstrators in the country's restive west on Friday, leading to the deaths of at least five protesters — the first fatalities in more than a month of anti-government rallies. Two soldiers also were killed, apparently in retaliation.

The violence is likely to exacerbate tensions between the Shiite-led government and minority Sunnis angry over perceived second-class treatment and what they see as unfair policies targeting their sect.

Friday's protest was part of a wave of rallies that first erupted in Anbar province last month after the arrest of bodyguards assigned to Sunni Finance Minister Rafia al-Issawi, who comes from the area. Anbar is a former al-Qaida stronghold that saw some of the fiercest fighting against U.S. forces during the war.

3 missing hostages dead in Algeria

OSLO—Norwegian energy company Statoil ASA said Friday that three Norwegian employees missing after a terror attack on a gas plant in Algeria have been confirmed dead.

Statoil CEO Helge Lund said the three workers were 58-year-old Tore Bech; Thomas Snekkevik, 35; and 55-year-old Hans M. Bjone.

Bech, who had worked for Statoil in Algeria since 2006, was the stepfather of Norwegian International Development Minister Heikki Holmaas.

Statoil gave no details about the victims or circumstances leading to their discovery or identification.

Two other Norwegian Statoil employees remain missing from the Jan. 16 attack on the Ain Amenas plant in the Sahara, which resulted in a four-day siege by Algerian forces, Statoil said. An al-Qaida affiliated organization has claimed responsibility for the attack.

Norwegian Prime Minister Jens Stoltenberg conveyed condolences to the families of the dead, describing the attack as "brutal ... and full of evil." He added that it is unlikely any more survivors of the attack will be found.

Algerian authorities have said at least 37 hostages and 29 militants died during the terrorist attack, and that five still were missing.

Egyptian protesters take cover as they clash with riot police, not seen, Friday near Tahrir Square in Cairo. Rallies in the nation brought out 500,000 supporters suggesting that opposition to President Mohammed Morsi and his Islamist allies is strong.

Protesters in Egypt angry with Muslim Brotherhood

Amending of constitution also demanded

By Hamza Hendawi
and Lee Keath
Associated Press

CAIRO—Egyptians delivered an angry backlash against President Mohammed Morsi and his Muslim Brotherhood on Friday, marking the second anniversary of the start of the country's revolution with tens of thousands filling major squares and streets around the country to call for a new regime change.

Two years to the day that protesters first rose up against now-toppled autocrat Hosni Mubarak, Egypt is entrenched in the new phase of its upheaval: the struggle between ruling Islamists and their opponents, played out on the backdrop of a worsening economy.

Rallies turned to clashes near Tahrir Square and outside the presidential palace in Cairo and in multiple cities around the country, with police firing tear gas and protesters throwing stones. At least four people, including a 14-year-old boy, were killed in the day's worst clashes, in the city of Suez, where protesters set ablaze a building that once housed the city's local government.

More than 370 were injured nationwide, the Health Ministry said, including five in Suez with gunshot wounds, raising the possibility of a higher death toll, the state news agency said.

Friday's rallies appeared to have brought out at least 500,000 opposition supporters, a small proportion of Egypt's 85 million people, but large enough to suggest that opposition to Morsi and his Islamist allies is strong in a country fatigued by two years of political turmoil, surging crime and a free falling economy that is fueling popular anger.

Protests — and clashes — took place in at least 12 of Egypt's 27 provinces, including several that are Islamist strongholds.

The immediate goal of the opposition was to have a show of strength to push Morsi to amend the country's new constitution, which was pushed through by his Islamist allies and rushed through a national referendum last month.

But more broadly, protesters are trying to show the extent of public anger against the Muslim Brotherhood, the organization Morsi hails from, which they say is acting unilaterally and taking over the state rather than setting up a broad-based democracy.

Islamists in Mali blow up bridge near Niger

By Rukmini Callimachi and Baba Ahmed
Associated Press

SEVARE, Mali—Islamic extremists based in the Malian town of Ansongo have destroyed a bridge near the Niger border, officials said on Friday, marking the first use of explosives by the insurgents since the start of a French-led military intervention two weeks ago.

The explosion shows that the extremists remain a nimble and daunting enemy, despite gains by the French, who have recaptured three towns from the insurgents and Friday pushed toward the Islamist stronghold of Gao, one of three provincial capitals controlled by the al-Qaida-linked rebels.

Djibril Diallo, the village chief of Fafa, located 12 miles from the bridge, said by telephone on Friday that residents of his town had called him to confirm that members of the Movement for the Oneness and Jihad in West Africa had traveled toward the border with Niger to the outskirts of Tassiga on Thursday, before destroying the bridge crossing into the town. The rebel group, also known as MUJAO, traveled from Ansongo, roughly 25 miles from Tassiga.

Since France began its military operation two weeks ago with a barrage of airstrikes followed by a land assault, the Islamists have retreated from three cities in Central Mali: Diabaly, Konna and Douentza. The Islamists still control the majority of the territory in Mali's north, most importantly the three provincial capitals in the north: Gao, Kidal and Tombouctou.

Wisconsin Gilda’s Club chapter keeps name after all

By Scott Bauer
Associated Press

MADISON, Wis. — Stung by the overwhelmingly negative reaction to removing the name of original “Saturday Night Live” cast member Gilda Radner from a cancer support group’s title, a Wisconsin chapter is borrowing one of the comedian’s catch phrases for its next announcement: Never mind.

Gilda’s Club Madison will remain just that, group leaders told The Associated Press on Wednesday. The board voted last week to keep the name after an avalanche of criticism in November when it announced it was switching to the more generic Cancer Support Community Southwest Wisconsin, in part out of concern that young people today were unfamiliar with Radner, who died of ovarian cancer in 1989.

“It really struck a chord with folks and all of us agreed we want people to come to Gilda’s and get the help that they need,” said Wayne Harris, chairman of the board for the Madison chapter. “If this is what it takes to make that happen, we’re all as a group happy to make it happen.”

The intention of changing to a broader name was honorable, Harris said. “In retrospect, we probably should have thought that through or understood it more,” he said.

Anger over the name change, which was supposed to take effect this month, came from members of the local Gilda’s Club chapter, fans of Radner who saw it as a slight to a woman who confronted cancer with dignity and humor, leaders of other clubs who reaffirmed their commitment to keeping the name, as well as Radner’s husband, actor Gene Wilder.

“We started receiving emails right away,” said Lannia Stenz, director of the Madison chapter. “For the most part it was simply asking ‘Why did you do this? Please reconsider.’ It was really, truly passionate feedback. We had some people who were angry but at the base of everything it was the love of Gilda and her story.”

Reaction to the news led to a flurry of positive comments Wednesday on the Gilda’s Club Facebook page and on Twitter.

Ron Nief, a professor at Beloit College in southern Wisconsin who has made a career out of studying how generations view the world differently, said he was glad to know that Radner still resonates with people and has not been forgotten.

But Nief also said he thought the decision to keep the name was more about securing future donations and less about honoring Radner.

“They are an organization that does very good work and in order to do it they have to raise money and the name is related to their ability to raise funds,” Nief said.

After shootings, states rethink mental health cuts

By Thomas Beaumont
Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa — Dozens of states have slashed spending on mental health care over the last four years, driven by the recession’s toll on revenue and, in some cases, a new zeal to shrink government.

But that trend may be heading for a U-turn in 2013 after last year’s shooting rampages by two mentally disturbed gunmen.

The reversal is especially jarring in statehouses dominated by conservative Republicans, who aggressively cut welfare programs but now find themselves caught in a crosscurrent of pressures involving gun control, public safety and health care for millions of disadvantaged Americans.

In many states, lawmakers have begun to recognize that their cuts “may have gone too deep,” said Shelley Chandler, executive director of the Iowa Alliance of Community Providers. “People start talking when there’s a crisis.”

About 30 states have reduced mental health spending since 2008, when revenues were in steep decline, according to the National Alliance on Mental Illness. In a third of those states, the cuts surpassed 10 percent.

As a result, nine state-run psychiatric hospitals were closed and another 3,200 beds for mental health patients were eliminated, dramatically reducing treatment options for the poor and people in the criminal-justice system. Thousands of patients were turned onto the streets.

Making matters worse, the cuts came as unemployment was rising, causing more people to lose private insurance and forcing them to shift to public assistance.

The steepest drop by percentage was in South Carolina, where spending fell by nearly 40 percent over four years — an amount that Republican Gov. Nikki Haley has called “absolutely immoral.”

Now Haley, who took office in 2011, has pledged to bolster a mental health system that dropped case workers, closed treatment centers and extended waiting lists. She also wants to expand remote access to psychiatrists through video conferencing.

Both Pennsylvania and Utah have put aside plans to scale back their mental health systems.

And Kansas, which cut mental health spending by 12 percent from 2008 to 2011, announced this month a new $10 million program aimed at identifying mental health dangers.

“I don’t think we’re well set as a state at all to be able to deal with these intensive cases” of mental illness, acknowledged Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback, usually an avid proponent of downsizing social programs.

The sudden pause reflects anxiety from last year’s shootings in a Colorado movie theater and a Connecticut elementary school. Although little is known about the mental health of either gunman, the attacks have shaken state legislatures that until recently didn’t intend to consider more social spending. In some cases, gun-rights advocates are seeking mental health reforms as an alternative to more gun laws.

Jon Thompson, spokesman for the Republican Governors Association, said many budget-cutting governors are having second thoughts, including whether to reform mental health policies “to further invest in the safety of their citizens.”

South Carolina eliminated 600 full-time case workers and closed five treatment centers. That led to an increase in the number of people with mental illness in jail in Columbia — so much that it now exceeds the patient total at the city’s public psychiatric hospital.

“We’ve been unable to maintain those preventative measures to keep people out of jail,” said Bill Lindsey, director of South Carolina’s National Association on Mental Illness.

During former Gov. Mark Sanford’s term, the fiscal pressure was incapable. The recession cut state revenue by more than $1 billion from 2008 to 2011.

“It wasn’t really Sanford’s fault,” said former state Rep. Dan Cooper, Republican chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. “There just wasn’t enough money to go around.”

Revenues have since recovered somewhat, and are projected to be at levels

Caseworker Cheryl Boone listens to a client during a therapy session at the Johnson County Mental Health Center Wednesday in Shawnee, Kan. Lawmakers across the nation are rethinking cuts in mental health care spending in the wake of recent shootings.

last seen in 2008.

In Kansas, under then-Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, a Democrat, state psychiatric hospitals began treating only the most dangerous cases. Caseloads at the Johnson County Mental Health Center near Kansas City rose from the recommended 15 per caseworker to more than 30 in 2010.

Tim DeWeese, the center’s clinical director, said one of his patients who had finished college and gotten a job and an apartment became homeless after his doctor visits were cut off.

“It came crashing down all the way,” DeWeese said.

Oklahoma also cut mental health programs in 2010 and 2011. But Republican Gov. Mary Fallin, a conservative elected in the GOP landslide of 2010 on a promise to cut spending, reversed course last year after grim warnings about the effect on public safety, and after several teen suicides in Oklahoma City.

“There just weren’t enough resources,” said Harry Tyler, director of the Mental Health Association of Central Oklahoma.

Fallin approved a 20 percent budget increase and has pledged to make mental health a priority again this year.

WASHINGTON — Sales of new U.S. homes cooled off in December compared with November but for the entire year were the best since 2009.

The Commerce Department said Friday that new-home sales fell 7.3 percent last month to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 369,000. That's down from November's rate of 398,000, which was the fastest in 2½ years.

For the year, sales rose nearly 20 percent to 367,000. That's the most since 2009, although the increase is coming off the worst year for new-home sales since the government began keeping records in 1963. Sales are still below the 700,000 level that economists consider healthy.

The housing market began to recover last year, roughly five years after the housing bubble burst. Stable job gains and record-low mortgage rates encouraged more people to buy homes. Prices have been rising on a sustained basis. And builders started to increase work on new homes, partly because the supply of homes had thinned to extremely low levels.

Jennifer Lee, a senior economist at BMO Capital Markets, said the December decline in sales of newly built homes wasn't cause for worry. She still expects sales to improve this year.

In a note to clients, she points out that figures for November, October and September were revised higher. And many buyers may have held off last month because of uncertainty over taxes. The White House and Congress reached a deal on Jan. 1 to keep income taxes from rising on most Americans.

"Take December's drop with a grain of salt, especially given all of the uncertainty about what will happen to taxes in the new year," Lee said. "And with new mortgage applications already picking (up) in the first three weeks of January, we should see a better report next month."

The median price for a new home rose in December to $248,900, up 1.3 percent from November and 13.8 percent from December 2011.

S&P closes above 1,500 for first time since 2007

By Steve Rothwell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Standard & Poor's 500 index closed above 1,500 on Friday for the first time since the start of the Great Recession in 2007, lifted by strong earnings from Procter & Gamble and Starbucks.

The S&P 500 rose 8.14 points to 1,502.96. It was the eighth straight gain, the longest winning streak since November 2004.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed at 13,895.98, up 70.65 points.

The Nasdaq composite gained 19.33 points to 3,149.71.

Procter & Gamble, world's largest consumer products maker, gained $2.83 to $73.25 after reporting that its quarterly income more than doubled. P&G also raised its profit forecast for its full fiscal year. Starbucks rose $2.24 to $56.81 after reporting a 13 percent increase in profits.

Apple continued to decline, allowing Exxon Mobil to once again surpass the electronics giant as the world's most valuable publicly traded company. Apple fell 2.4 percent to $439.88, following a 12 percent drop on Thursday, the biggest one-day percentage drop for the company since 2008, after Apple forecast slower sales. The stock is now 37 percent below the record high of $702.10 it reached Sept. 19.

Apple first surpassed Exxon in market value in the summer of 2011, grabbing a title Exxon had held since 2005. The two traded places through that fall, until Apple surpassed Exxon in early 2012.

Stocks have surged this month, with the S&P 500 advancing 5.4 percent. It jumped at the start of the year when lawmakers reached a last-minute deal to avoid the "fiscal cliff." Stocks built on those gains on optimism that the housing market is recovering and the labor market is healing. The Dow Jones is up 6 percent on the year.

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY:

“REDEFINING”

Last week I presented some thoughts as to why there are changes taking place among many religious groups. Have you noticed that if people can't convince others that their actions are acceptable they just set out to redefine what they are doing. Take for instance the subject of marriage. When Jesus was confronted with questions regarding the putting away of a mate he responded with a statement that was at least 4,000 years old. Jesus went back to the first couple and restated God's plan for marriage. "And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." (Matthew 19:4-6). If God's plan for marriage had not changed in 4,000 years why would anyone think it has changed in the last 2,000 years since Jesus spoke those words. Regardless of how men may seek to redefine marriage God's definition will remain the same. The question for this week is the same as last week's point-Will we respect God's way or choose to follow the dictates of man? I urge all of you to answer as did Joshua of old- "...but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord". (Joshua 24:15b) No one on earth has a right to even attempt to make changes in God's eternal word.

American Airlines gets new uniforms

First American Airlines wanted to redesign its planes, and now it plans to outfit employees in new uniforms.

The airline said Friday that it hired fashion designers Ken Kaufman and Isaac Franco to create uniforms for pilots, flight attendants and customer-service agents.

The makeover will take 18 months. American didn't say how much it will cost.

Gatorade removes criticized ingredient

PepsiCo Inc. is removing a controversial ingredient from its Gatorade sports drink in response to customer complaints.

A spokeswoman for the company, Molly Carter, said Friday that the move was in the works for the past year after the company began "hearing rumblings" from consumers about the ingredient. She said it wasn't a response to a recent petition on Change.org by a Mississippi teenager.

Ingredients in food and drinks have come under greater scrutiny in recent years, helped by the ability of consumers to mobilize online.

The petition on Change.org noted that the ingredient, brominated vegetable oil, has been patented as a flame retardant and is banned in Japan and the European Union.

Verizon sells spectrum to AT&T

Verizon Wireless said Friday that it's selling space on the airwaves to AT&T Inc. in exchange for $1.9 billion and the transfer of some airwave rights from AT&T.

The sale of spectrum rights will let AT&T expand its capacity for wireless broadband in areas that include Chicago, Los Angeles, Miami, Oklahoma City and Cincinnati. In return, it's getting other frequencies in Los Angeles, Fresno, Calif., Phoenix and Portland, Ore.

The deals are part of a yearlong spectrum reshuffling process for Verizon and AT&T. AT&T is on the hunt for more spectrum, while Verizon has been optimizing its holdings to make them easier to use with wireless service.

Exxon passes Apple in stock value

Exxon has once again surpassed Apple as the world's most valuable company after the iPhone and iPad maker saw its stock price falter.

Apple Inc.'s stock has been on the decline since the company's quarterly earnings report Wednesday suggested that its fast growth phase, rare for a company of its size, may be coming to an end.

Apple's stock fell 2.6 percent to $438.76 in afternoon trading Friday for a market capitalization of $412 billion.

That followed a 12 percent drop on Thursday, the biggest one-day percentage drop for the company since 2008.

Exxon Mobil Corp. gained 10 cents Friday to $91.45 for a market capitalization of $417 billion.

Hasbro announces plan to cut jobs

Toy maker Hasbro said Friday that its fourth-quarter revenue failed to meet expectations because of weaker-than-expected demand over the holidays. It plans to cut about 10 percent of its workforce and consolidate facilities to reduce expenses.

The stock dropped more than 4 percent in morning trading.

Pawtucket, R.I.-based Hasbro, whose brands include Monopoly and Nerf, has about 5,500 employees worldwide. A 10 percent workforce cut would put about 550 people out of work.

While Hasbro said consumer demand was softer than it expected over the holidays, the season was expected to be tough. This was in part because retailers were ordering inventory more cautiously.

Court: Obama recess appointments violate Constitution

■ If ruling stands, it could nullify many board decisions in past year

By Sam Hananel
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—President Barack Obama violated the Constitution when he bypassed the Senate last year to appoint three members of the National Labor Relations Board, a federal appeals court ruled Friday in a far-reaching decision that could severely limit a chief executive's powers to make recess appointments.

The decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit marked a victory for Republicans and business groups critical of the labor board. If it stands, it could invalidate hundreds of board decisions over the past year, including some that make it easier for unions to organize.

When Obama filled the vacancies on Jan. 4, 2012, Congress was on an extended holiday break. But GOP lawmakers gaveled in for a few minutes every three days just to prevent Obama from making recess appointments. The White House argued that the pro forma sessions — some lasting less than a minute — were a sham.

The court rejected that argument, but went even further, finding that under the Constitution, a recess occurs only during the breaks between formal year-long sessions of Congress, not just any informal break when lawmakers leave town. It also held that presidents can bypass the Senate only when administration vacancies occur during a recess.

White House press secretary Jay Carney said the administration strongly disagrees with the decision and that the labor board would continue to conduct business as usual, despite calls by some Republicans for the board members to resign.

"The decision is novel and unprecedented," Carney said. "It contradicts 150 years of practice by Democratic and Republican administrations."

Under the court's decision, 285 recess appointments made by presidents between 1867 and 2004 would be invalid.

The Justice Department hinted that the administration would ask the Supreme Court to overturn the decision, which was rendered by three conservative judges appointed by Republican presidents. "We disagree with the court's ruling and believe that the president's recess appointments are constitutionally sound," the statement said.

The court acknowledged that the ruling conflicts with what some other federal appeals courts have held about when recess appointments are valid, which only added to the likelihood of an appeal to the high court.

The ruling also threw into question the legitimacy of Obama's recess appointment of Richard Cordray to head the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. Cordray's appointment, made on the same date, has been challenged in a separate case.

Carney insisted the court's ruling affects only a single case before the labor board and would have no bearing on Cordray's appointment. Obama on Thursday renominated Cordray for the job.

The case challenging the recess appointments was brought by Noel Canning, a Washington state bottling company that claimed an NLRB decision against it was not valid because the board members were not properly appointed. The D.C. Circuit panel agreed.

Former River House to become Comfort Inn

By Carol Wersich
Scripps Newspapers

The former River House Hotel at 20 Walnut St. in downtown Evansville will become a Comfort Inn & Suites under new owner George Yerolemou when the six-story facility reopens in 2014, expanded and fully remodeled.

Yerolemou said prime aspects of proposed renovations include:

- Getting rid of exterior balconies for expanding space of the guest rooms.
- Adding a guest swimming pool to the first floor.
- Adding an exercise room to the second floor.
- Refurbishing the exterior with a stucco-like material and faux brick and stone.
- Making major landscape improvements.
- Renovating the 40 guests rooms contained in a second building, which is part of the hotel, located across Walnut Street from the main building.

Those rooms, plus 46 in the main building, will give the hotel a total of 86 guest rooms.

Christy Gillenwater, president and chief executive officer of the Chamber of Commerce of Southwest Indiana, said,

"The (proposed) rebirth of the iconic structure is welcomed activity for the Downtown."

The new Comfort Inn & Suites is expected to create between 40 to 50 full-time jobs.

Greg Wathen, president and chief executive officer of the Economic Development Coalition of Southwest Indiana, said, "Having more people working Downtown helps the Downtown overall."

The main building's top-floor restaurant space, formerly operated as Bernie Little's Sunset Restaurant, known for its expansive views of the Ohio River, no longer will operate as a dining facility. Yerolemou said Comfort Inn's guidelines do not allow for a restaurant. He plans to lease the 8,000-square-foot space for offices.

"Restaurants don't make money for hotels," he said.

The remodeling is expected to begin in mid-April or May and take a year to complete.

The exterior plans were approved recently by the Evansville Metropolitan Development Design Review Committee.

Yerolemou currently also owns the Econo Lodge & Suites Evansville at 1930 Cross Pointe Blvd., which is a part of the Comfort Inn chain.

The 44-year-old native of the island nation of Cyprus, in the eastern Mediterranean Sea, purchased the former River House last May from Seymour, Ind.-headquartered Centra Credit Union for $475,000, after the property had sat empty for some time.

Yerolemou, an Evansville resident the past 22 years, said "I have always believed in downtown, and I wanted to make the purchase... I was attracted to the location for its six floors, plus basement."

"I'm excited to get the project done," he said.

He was uncertain what the cost of the remodel will total.

He is a former partner in the Acropolis Greek Restaurant, located across Green River Road from Eastland Mall.

WEATHER from 1A

"It started about 6 a.m.," he said. "The Audubon and Breathitt/Pennyrile parkways were very slick."

Berry said some of the accidents involved vehicles hitting icy spots and flipping.

"The county roads (were) slick as well, but we didn't have too many issues" with accidents, he said.

Trooper Corey King, public information officer with the Kentucky State Police Post 16 in Henderson, said troopers worked "multiple" wrecks and incidents with vehicles sliding off the roads Friday morning in Henderson County. King said at least one of the accidents involved injuries. Further information was immediately unavailable.

Henderson Police Officer Jennifer Richmond, public information officer for HPD, said some roads in the city Friday morning were very slick.

"We've called out the state road crews to treat overpasses, particularly the Cloverleaf," she said.

Despite the pre-treating by crews with the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet, state highways and bridges iced over Friday morning causing problems in Henderson County and even bigger problems in areas such as Daviess, McLean, Hopkins, Ohio and Muhlenberg counties, according to Keith Todd, public information officer.

"(Pre-treating) helped in the early hours, but between 5 and 6 a.m. we got heavier bands of rain that washed off the pre-treatment (solution)," Todd said.

A unique aspect of this weather system, he said, "It developed right on top of us. So one minute we were fine and the next minute" roads were covered with ice.

Henderson County experienced some rough road conditions, but other areas of western Kentucky faced much worse, he said.

A crash involving several vehicles and a semi in Ohio County shut down a portion of Kentucky 54 for several hours on Friday. Also, the eastbound lanes of the Western Kentucky Parkway were closed due to icy conditions, Todd said.

In Muhlenberg County, two state department salt trucks slid off the road, and power lines were down in Hopkins County, according to information provided by the transportation cabinet.

Todd said road conditions improved as temperatures improved, however, motorists were urged to drive with caution.

The National Weather Service in Paducah on Friday said the precipitation that fell on the area was "light" but caused serious problems.

"We had accidents reported up into Indiana," said Meteorologist Chris Noles. "(The precipitation) was very light, but very problematic."

"We had the perfect temperatures for this scenario. They were in the mid to upper 20s and they didn't move," he said. "In fact, they started to fall."

The forecast shows a steady climb of temperatures beginning Sunday, thanks to a chance of rain. As for today, the high is expected to be 34 degrees with mostly sunny skies.

Sunday's high temperature increases to the lower 40s; Monday's to 59 degrees and Tuesday's high to the mid-60s. There is a chance of rain all three days.

OBAMA from 1A

action by his re-election win and seeking to capitalize on it.

"There is a deep recognition that he has a short period of time to get a lot done," said Jennifer Psaki, Obama's 2012 campaign spokeswoman. "The American people are seeing a man who is determined to finish what he started in his first term, pushing through his agenda without the burden of running for re-election."

But following through and winning approval for his proposals will require cooperation from a Congress that is nearly as divided now as it was before the November elections.

"If the president pursues that kind of agenda, obviously it's not designed to bring us together," said Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, who calls the start of Obama's second term "a new era of liberalism."

And it's not just congressional Republicans who could stand in Obama's way as he seeks to make good on his pledges. Senate Democrats from conservative-leaning states — who, unlike Obama, still face future elections — may have reservations about backing a liberal agenda in the lead-up to the 2014 midterms.

Democratic resistance is already proving to be a problem for some of the toughest gun control measures that Obama proposed ahead of his inauguration in response to the elementary school shooting in Newtown, Conn. An assault weapons ban, in particular, appears to be in jeopardy, with Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada among the Democrats yet to voice support.

Obama's tilt to the left follows a presidential campaign that left open questions about what policies

In this Jan. 14 file photo, President Barack Obama speaks during his final news conference of his first term in the East Room of the White House in Washington.

he would pursue if he won a second term. His most specific campaign pledge was to let George W. Bush-era tax cuts expire for the wealthiest Americans, a step he was able to achieve during the "fiscal cliff" negotiations in late December.

That's why many of his strongest supporters were surprised — some pleasantly — by the issues he raised in his inaugural address, particularly his call for tackling the threat of climate change, a topic that garnered little attention during the campaign.

And after campaigning on a balanced approach to deficit reduction, including making tough choices on entitlement programs, Obama used his inauguration to extol the virtues of Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security. He made just one reference to the huge federal deficit.

Obama has previously said he's willing to put government entitlements on the table as Washington seeks to reduce the deficit, and aides say his inaugural address doesn't change that.

Obama also became the first president to use the word "gay" in an inaugural address, asserting that the nation's journey is not complete until "our gay brothers and sisters are treated like anyone else under the law."

Progressive groups welcomed the president's rhetoric, but made it clear that words alone would not be enough.

Adam Green, co-founder of the political action group Progressive Change Campaign Committee, said that if the president's inaugural address does become a template for his second-term governing strategy, "that will allow the president to win big victories and secure a legacy of bold progressive change that helped millions of Americans."

"We hope he goes that route, and we will proudly rally to his side if he does," Green said.

It remains to be seen how vigorously Obama pursues the agenda items he outlined in his inaugural address. White House officials have already struggled this week to back up his rhetoric with specific policy proposals.

Still, people close to the president say he feels emboldened since winning re-election and wants to act quickly on progressive issues that eluded him during his first term. His supporters have also created a campaign spin-off organization to support his second-term agenda.

The outside group, Organizing for Action, will employ many of the same people who led Obama's two presidential bids and will have access to his campaign's voter and donor data. The new group is expected to focus on backing his positions in legislative battles, including gun control and immigration.

Some of what the president may pursue, particularly when it comes to climate change, may be through executive branch actions that don't need congressional approval.

The Pentagon this week acted on its own to lift a ban that kept female service members out of combat positions. And the Education Department unilaterally ordered schools to include students with disabilities in sports programs or provide equal alternative options.

White House officials are scouring rule books for other actions the West Wing and government agencies can take on their own.

Stanley said she's hopeful that the results will be back early in the weekend so the next step can be planned and people notified.

Classes were canceled Friday for South Heights Elementary students after crews tearing up carpet on Wednesday found something they thought might indicate the presence of asbestos.

During a news conference on Thursday, Stanley said the carpet was being replaced due to a leak in the school's roof and ceiling which caused water damage in a classroom utilized by third-, fourth- and fifth-graders.

She said the classroom hasn't been used since the leak occurred. However, Stanley said for the safety of students and staff, classes were canceled on Friday as samples were taken from the classroom which sustained the water damage, a hallway and some surrounding classrooms.

The event at noon Friday also included separate auctions for items from inside the old school. Those sales covered furniture, church pews, kitchen equipment, musical instruments, toys and other assorted knick-knacks, such as a box of old school trophies, some of which dated back to 1929.

The building includes eight classrooms, each with its own heating and air conditioning, six bathrooms, a large gymnasium and stage.

The area where the auction was held includes a kitchen and cafeteria, which has been used as gathering room in recent years.

The oldest portions of the building itself date from the 1950s, but the annex where the auction was held is much newer, and more recently has been used for church services as well as city council meetings.

"This addition here cost $700,000," auctioneer Mike Herron said. "Somebody is getting a bargain. It's got new windows in it and a new roof."

"You've got a solid, solid building right here," Kevin Herron said in kicking off the auction. "An excellent 3 and a half acre lot right here in the heart of Corydon."

MORGANFIELD — Ellie Fruit and DeAsia Outlaw led an impressive shooting night for Henderson County, which beat Union County 79-39 on Friday.

Repeatedly getting shots around the basket, the Lady Colonels (16-1) made 21 of their 30 field-goal attempts in the first half to jump out to a 49-21 halftime lead.

Fruit scored 20 of her game-high 26 points in the first half, while Outlaw scored a career-high 18 points with 16 in the first half alone.

Fruit's good start was infectious to the rest of the team, Henderson County coach Jeff Haile said. "She played with a lot of intensity," he said. "That carries over to the rest of our team."

The senior forward repeatedly put the ball on the floor and drove to the basket. She was 11-of-14 from the field with one 3-pointer and was 3-of-5 from the free-throw line.

Outlaw was 9-of-13 from the field and grabbed a team-high six rebounds. The sophomore forward continues to show improvement as she gains experience, Haile said.

"She's doing better in practice and in each game she's been getting a little better. She did a good job

Ayla Hendrickson topped Union County (7-11) with 12 points, while Mikayla Thompson scored 11 points, all in the second half.

The Lady Colonels closed the first quarter with a 17-5 run after breaking a 5-5 tie and had control the rest of the way. They scored 27 points in the second quarter to increase the margin to 28 by halftime and engaged the 35-point mercy rule by the end of the third quarter.

For the game, Henderson County was 32-of-49

Murray outlasts Federer to reach final

■ He predicts pain when he faces Djokovic for Aussie title

By John Pye
Associated Press

MELBOURNE, Australia — Andy Murray was sucking in deep breaths, trying to recover from his exhausting win over Roger Federer. Pain was very much on his mind.

The U.S. Open champion defeated Federer 6-4, 6-7 (5), 6-3, 6-7 (2), 6-2 in a four-hour Australian Open semifinal Friday night. It was Murray's first victory against the 17-time major winner at a Grand Slam event.

But with the clock about to strike midnight, Murray was already thinking about Sunday's final against two-time defending champion Novak Djokovic, who is on a 20-match winning streak at Melbourne Park. This will be a rematch of their U.S. Open final.

"Every time we play each other it's normally a very physical match," Murray said. "I'll need to be ready for the pain. I hope it's a painful match

Britain's Andy Murray reaches for a return to Switzerland's Roger Federer during their semifinal match at the Australian Open tennis championship in Melbourne, Australia, on Friday. Murray won and will face Novak Djokovic in the final.

— that'll mean it's a good one."

Murray had a 10-9 record against Federer, but had lost his three previous Grand Slam matches to the Swiss star. One of those defeats came at Wimbledon last year. Murray says the disappointment of that loss triggered his run to the gold medal at the London Olympics, and then his drought-breaking triumph at the U.S. Open.

"You know, I've obviously lost some tough matches against him in Slams," Murray said. "So to win one, especially the way that it went tonight, yeah, was obviously nice."

Murray ended a 76-year drought for British men at the majors when he beat Djokovic in five sets in the final at Flushing Meadows.

He's hoping the step-by-step manner in which he has crossed career milestones off his to-do list will continue Sunday. He lost four major finals, including two in Australia, before winning a Grand Slam title. He lost three times to Federer in a major before beating him. Even then, he wasted a chance to serve out in the fourth set Friday night as Federer rallied.

"Those matches ... have helped obviously mentally," he said. "I think going through a lot of the losses that I've had will have helped me as well. Obviously having won against Novak before in a Slam final will help mentally."

Djokovic will not be the only defending champion this weekend playing for another title. Victoria Azarenka will face China's Li Na on Saturday night for the women's crown.

Azarenka hasn't added a major title since her breakthrough in Australia last year. She's coming off a semifinal victory over American teenager Sloane Stephens in which she had to answer a torrent of questions over her nine-minute medical timeout after wasting five match points and then dropping serve in the next-to-last game.

Li, who is seeded sixth, lost the 2011 Australian final before claiming her first major title months later at the French Open. She made the final with less commotion, beating No. 2 Maria Sharapova in straight sets.

The first title of the 2013 Australian Open, women's doubles, was decided Friday when top-seeded Sara Errani and Roberta Vinci of Italy beat unseeded Australians Ashleigh Barty and Casey Dellacqua 6-2, 3-6, 6-2.

That was a prelude to the night match, where 15,000 people packed Rod Laver Arena, including the great Laver himself, to see if Federer could reach a sixth Australian final. The 31-year-old Swiss has won four of his 17 titles at Melbourne Park.

He showed flashes of his customary genius, but also rare bursts of anger. Murray showed his frustration as well. The crowd started to turn on him after he challenged a call in the eighth game of the fourth set, booing each time he complained to the umpire. His unforced error into the net on the next point prompted a huge cheer.

In the 12th game of the fourth set, Federer appeared to yell across the net after Murray stopped momentarily behind the baseline during the rally.

Murray shrugged it off and seemed to dig in. He'd won that point but lost the game and was taken to another tiebreaker, which he lost.

"We were just checking each other out for bit," Federer said. "That wasn't a big deal for me — I hope not for him."

FRANKFORT — Between 31 points from Newport Central Catholic's Nicole Kiernan and a poor shooting performance, Webster County had too much to overcome in Friday morning's 55-35 All A Classic quarterfinal loss.

Kiernan, a 5-10 junior forward, nearly outscored the Lady Trojans by herself. She made 10 of 15 field-goal attempts and was 11-

Webster County (17-3) struggled to score, making just 12 percent of its field goal attempts in the first half to fall behind the Thoroughbreds 28-13 at halftime as Kiernan had already scored 20 points.

The Lady Trojans improved somewhat offensively in the second half (8-of-34) but still finished with an 18.6 field-goal percentage for the contest. They did cut the lead to 10 before Newport Catholic ended the third quarter with a 7-0 run.

Mariah Herrera topped Webster County with 11 points. Bailey Townsend had seven rebounds.

Newport Catholic (17-4) will face Bishop Brossart in today's first semifinal at 9 a.m. Central time. Bishop Brossart (18-4) advanced with a 41-40 over Frankfort Friday morning.

A-Rod could miss the entire season

NEW YORK — Yankees general manager Brian Cashman says it's possible that third baseman Alex Rodriguez could miss the entire season while coming off hip surgery.

Cashman says "there's no guarantees" that Rodriguez will be able to play this year.

Cashman made his remarks Friday on WFAN radio in New York.

The 37-year-old Rodriguez had surgery on his left hip last week. The team said the recovery time was expected to be six months, which would sideline the star slugger until the All-Star break.

Armstrong to help 'clean up cycling'

AUSTIN, Texas — An attorney for Lance Armstrong told the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency the cyclist will cooperate with efforts to "clean up cycling," though it's the sport's governing body and world anti-doping officials who should take the lead.

In letters sent this week between attorneys for Armstrong and USADA, and obtained by The Associated Press, USADA attorney William Bock requested Armstrong testify under oath by Feb. 6, but the cyclist's attorney, Tim Herman, responds that Armstrong cannot accommodate that schedule.

NEW YORK — Dr. Phil McGraw has booked the first on-camera interview with the man who allegedly concocted the girlfriend hoax that ensnared Notre Dame football star Manti Te'o.

A "Dr. Phil Show" spokesperson confirmed on Friday the interview with Ronaiah Tuasosopo, the man accused of creating an online persona of a nonexistent woman who Te'o said he fell for without ever meeting face-to-face.

Butler expects top scorer back

INDIANAPOLIS — Butler is expected to have its top scorer back on the court Saturday against Temple.

Guard Rotnei Clarke has missed the last three games with a severely sprained neck. Team trainer Ryan Galloy says Clarke has been cleared for the game after returning to full-contact practice Thursday and remaining symptom free.

If there are no changes Friday night or Saturday, Clarke will be permitted to play, Galloy said in a statement released by the team Friday.

Davis-White post career-best score

Butler is doing it again

■ Ninth-ranked Bulldogs reaping benefits of the building process

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The banners hanging from Hinkle Fieldhouse's dusty rafters are a constant reminder of achievement at Butler.

More national championship game appearances than any school in America over the last three years. The first Indiana school to reach back-to-back Final Fours. Four trips to the regional semifinals in the last decade.

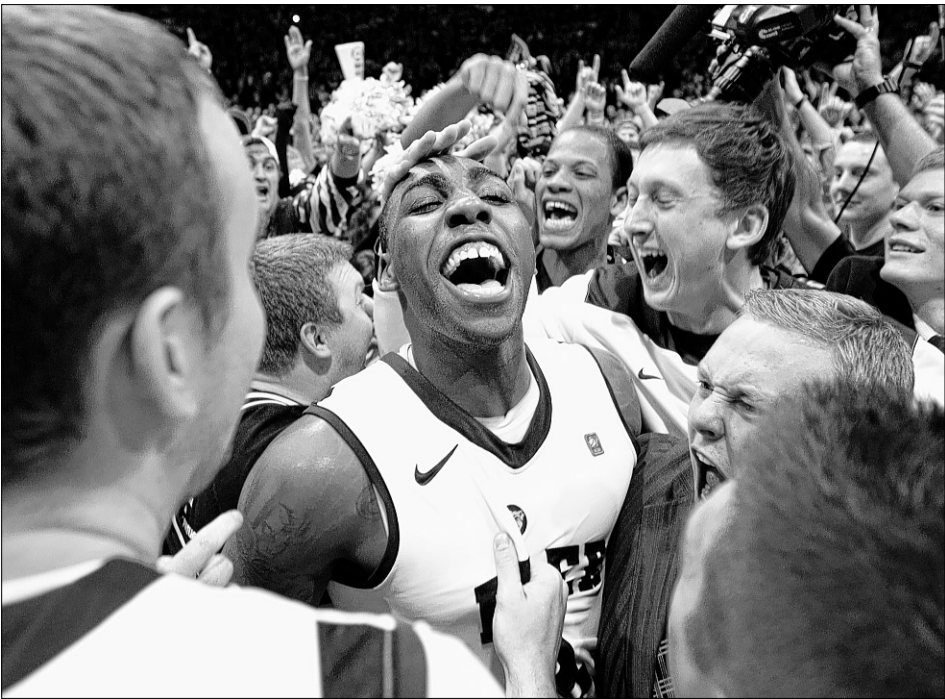

It's enough to make the even the best-known basketball programs jealous and the Bulldogs are at it again.

After beating three top 10 teams for the first time in school history and moving into the top 10 this week for the first time in nearly five years, Butler is trying to show the college basketball world that beating the big boys, winning games late and making the impossible look plausible isn't all that unusual anymore around here.

"I think you can teach what Butler is teaching, but I think more goes into it than just teaching it. It's the entire environment," said Todd Lickliter, the coach who led Butler to the regional semifinals in 2003 and 2007 before taking the Iowa job. He is now at nearby Marian University, a NAIA school, and watched one of college basketball's plays of the year from the stands last Saturday when Butler knocked off Gonzaga on a buzzer beater.

"As a coach, you send messages with everything you do in the program, from the top down," he said. "The message Butler has sent is that it has fierce competitors who have a joy for competition and a joy for the game. Let me tell you, nobody had more joy in the game than Butler did the other night."

Somehow no program seems to have more charming stories than this little school just a few miles north of downtown Indianapolis:

In this Jan. 19 file photo, Butler forward Roosevelt Jones celebrates hitting the game-winning shot against Gonzaga in a game in Indianapolis. Butler won 64-63. The banners at Hinkle Fieldhouse speak to Butler's achievements. This, after all, is a school with more national championship game appearances than anyone else the last three years. And the Bulldogs aren't finished yet.

■ During the 2003 NCAA tournament, forward Joel Cornette traded shoes with teammate Rob Walls after chasing a loose ball out of bounds and knocking over a water cooler during an upset of Louisville. The next day, Cornette and two other seniors were selling tickets to their own regional semifinal game at a folding table in the front hallway of the fieldhouse.

■ Four years later, after returning to the regional round, shooting guard A.J. Graves was asked whether the deep background inside St. Louis' Edward Jones Dome might be a problem for the Bulldogs. Graves, who grew up in Switz City, a rural Indiana community of less than 300 people about 85 miles southeast of Indy, explained he was comfortable with deep backgrounds because he grew up around fields that stretched for miles.

■ Butler's 2010 tourney run included Matt Howard borrowing a shoelace from Emerson Kampen for one game, players attending classes the day of the national championship game and Howard having the presence of mind to actually set a pick that gave Gordon Hayward an open half-court heave that nearly beat Duke.

■ The next season, associate head coach Matthew Graves wound up replacing coach Brad Stevens for Senior Day festivities after Stevens was forced to leave late in the first half with what was later diagnosed as a corneal edema. In the second round of the NCAA tourney, Howard drew an inexplicable foul with 0.8 seconds left and made a free throw to beat Pittsburgh, spurring Butler's second straight improbable Final Four run.

Stevens, of course, is only around now because he quit a promising business career with Eli Lilly, a pharmaceutical company based in Indy, to become a volunteer coach at Butler in 2000 and then walked away from the big money offered by even bigger schools.

This season stories include having a walk-on make a spinning 6-foot jumper to beat No. 1 Indiana, a sharp-shooter bank in a 3-pointer to beat Marquette and Roosevelt Jones' incredible steal with 3.5 seconds left and his 14-foot floater to upset No. 8 Gonzaga last weekend on national television. It's not even February yet.

The Bulldogs don't win them all, as Wednesday night's loss in the closing seconds at La Salle proved. But those around the Butler program understand this is more than just good luck.

"We believe that our strength lies in the group and not the individual parts," Butler alum and athletic director Barry Collier said. "We had to work our way up to the upper division by trying to have a winning season, then having a winning conference season, then being in the championship hunt, then winning a championship and being in the NCAA tournament."

Shanghai Bobby to launch season

The Associated Press

HALLANDALE BEACH, Fla. — Shanghai Bobby begins his Triple Crown campaign Saturday by seeking another victory at Gulfstream Park.

The early Kentucky Derby favorite launches his 2013 season as a solid favorite in the Grade 3, $400,000 Holy Bull Stakes.

Shanghai Bobby was chosen the 2012 champion 2-year-old in Eclipse ceremonies at Gulfstream last week. Now he'll start on the rail and run 1 1/16 miles against nine other Triple Crown prospects.

"Expectations are pretty high, so we have to make sure we've done our job properly and put him in a position where he will perform to the best of his capabilities," trainer Todd Pletcher said. "He's grown up, filling out, all the things you want to see from him going into his 3-year-old year."

Jockey Rosie Napravnik flies in from New Orleans for the mount. Napravnik rode Shanghai Bobby to all five of his victories last year, culminating in a win by a head in the Grade 1, $2 million Breeders' Cup Juvenile at Santa Anita on Nov. 3.

"I'm impressed the way he has been able to handle everything we've thrown at him," Pletcher said. "He's won at Aqueduct, Belmont, Saratoga, Santa Anita, and he seems to handle every surface we've put him on. He has handled shipping cross-country; he has handled two turns. So he's been a real pleasure to train."

Pletcher-trainer 3-year-old filly Kauai Katie returns to Gulfstream on Saturday for the Grade 2, $200,000 Forward Gal Stakes. Jockey John Velazquez gets the return call on Kauai Katie in the field of six as she bids for a fifth victory in six career starts.

Shanghai Bobby, the 4-5 morning-line favorite in the Holy Bull, was purchased for $185,000 at the Keeneland September yearling sales by Starlight Racing. The son of Harlan's Holiday is now co-owned by the Coolmore team of Mrs. John Magnier, Michael Tabor and Derrick Smith.

Wall makes first start as Wizards top Wolves

Wire reports

John Wall had 14 points and five assists in his first start of the season, and the no-longer-last Washington Wizards finally hit double digits in wins Friday night with a 114-101 victory over the Minnesota Timberwolves.

Wall, who came off the bench for the first seven games after his return from a knee injury, had assists on the Wizards' first two baskets in a game in which Washington never trailed. He wowed the crowd with a nice spin move for a layup late in the first half and went 6 for 10 from the field in 21 minutes, his playing time still limited after missing 33 games with a stress injury to his left knee cap.

The Wizards are 5-3 since Wall's return after going 5-28 without him.

Irving, voted an Eastern Conference reserve for next month's All-Star Game in Houston on Thursday, scored 16 points in the third quarter to help Cleveland get back in the game.

■ Heat 110, Pistons 88: Dwyane Wade scored 29 points and sparked a pivotal run to help the Miami Heat earn their fourth victory in a row Friday by beating the Detroit Pistons 110-88.

LeBron James had 23 points, seven rebounds and seven assists.

■ Hawks 123, Celtics 111: Kyle Korver scored 27 points and the Atlanta Hawks overcame a 27-point deficit in the first half to beat Boston 123-111 in double-overtime on Friday night, handing the Celtics their sixth straight loss.

■ Bulls 103, Warriors 87: Kirk Hinrich scored a season-high 25 points, hitting six of seven three-pointers in the Chicago Bulls' 103-87 victory over the Golden State Warriors on Friday night.

■ Grizzlies 101, Nets 77: Marc Gasol had 20 points and nine rebounds and the Memphis Grizzlies built a 30-point lead in the second half en route to a 101-77 victory over the Brooklyn Nets on Friday night.

■ Rockets 100, Hornets 82: First-time All-Star James Harden had 30 points and the Houston Rockets broke out of their worst slump of the season by beating the New Orleans Hornets 100-82 on Friday night.

■ Spurs 113, Mavericks 107: Tony Parker returned from a cut above the same eye he injured in a nightclub incident last summer and scored 23 points to lead the San Antonio Spurs to a 113-107 victory over the Dallas Mavericks on Friday night.

Flacco: Blue Hen with golden arm

■ He'll be 2nd Delaware QB to make start in Super Bowl

By Rob Maadi
Associated Press

OWINGS MILLS, Md. — Maybe Delaware is the new Quarterback U.

When Joe Flacco takes the field with the Baltimore Ravens against San Francisco, he'll be the second former Blue Hens quarterback to start a Super Bowl. Rich Gannon was the first with Oakland 10 years ago.

That's more than powerhouses USC, Texas, Oklahoma and Florida combined. It's one more than Miami, Michigan, Tennessee, Penn State, Florida State, Syracuse, Nebraska and Pitt.

Stanford, UCLA, BYU, Maryland and Washington State also have two. Only Notre Dame, Alabama, Purdue and California have three.

Quite an impressive feat for a second-tier football college in the second-smallest state in the U.S.

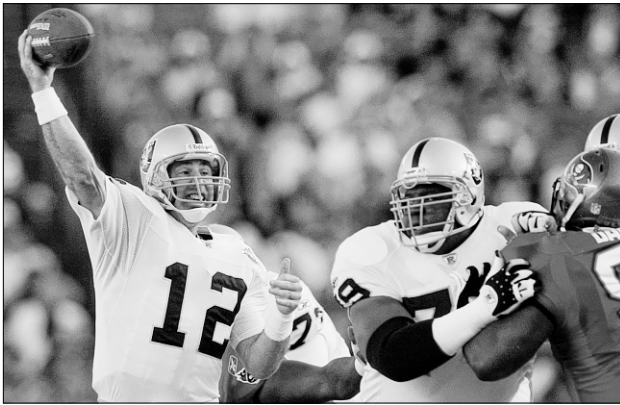

It's a good thing Flacco didn't turn to baseball when he hoped or he may not have even made it to the NFL.

The story goes like this. After his junior season at Delaware, Flacco went to then-coach K.C. Keeler and told him he'd like to pitch for the Blue Hens' baseball team in the spring. Keeler and other coaches persuaded him to concentrate on football.

Over the years, the context of that conversation has been reported different ways. Flacco set the record straight this week, making it clear he simply wanted to play two sports and wasn't considering quitting football.

"K.C. misrepresents that," Flacco said. "I just wanted to play baseball because I liked baseball. I never was giving up on football. I always had a lot of confidence in my ability there. I just wanted to have a little bit of fun."

Flacco had an outstanding senior year and led Delaware to the FCS championship game against Appalachian State. He wowed Baltimore's scouting department in a long workout before the draft and ended up being selected by the Ravens with the No. 18 overall pick in 2008.

Since then, Flacco has done things no other quarterback has accomplished during the Super Bowl era.

Flacco is the first quarterback to lead his team to a playoff victory in each of his first five seasons. His six postseason wins on the road rank first and he leads the league with 62 victories since 2008.

"I'm really happy for him and as a former Blue Hen, I'm really proud," said Gannon, who was the NFL MVP in 2002 when he led the Raiders to the Super Bowl, a loss to Tampa Bay.

"His career is off to a terrific start and you can only imagine what will happen next Sunday if he's able to get the job done and win a world championship."

Flacco has padded his already remarkable resume this month. In three playoff games, he's thrown eight touchdown passes and not a single interception. His biggest achievement, though, is beating Peyton Manning and Tom Brady on the road in consecutive games to help the Ravens win their second AFC championship.

"This isn't just instant success," Gannon said. "You go back and study the guy and this has happened over the last five years. He has some rare talent. He can really throw the ball and he has good mobility for a guy his size. He's going to get better and the team around him is going to get better."

The 28-year-old Flacco grew up in South Jersey and starred at Audubon High School, a short ride from Philadelphia. He went to Pittsburgh at first, but transferred to Delaware after redshirting his freshman year and playing in just three games in 2004. Flacco didn't get a transfer exception from then-Pitt coach Dave Wannstedt so he had to pay his way to Delaware.

If he has any student loans bills remaining, Flacco can easily pay those off after this season. He's eligible to become a free agent and surely will get a lucrative contract from the Ravens.

All he cares about now is hoisting that Vince Lombardi Trophy on Feb. 3.

"I think it's just one of those things you dream of when you are a little kid," he said. "You watch Joe Montana and those guys light them up in the Super Bowl. So, to be here at this point is pretty special."

Gannon exchanged text messages with Flacco before the AFC title game at New England last week and spoke to him several times during the season. As a broadcaster for CBS Sports and SiriusXM NFL Radio, Gannon has covered many of Flacco's games and knows him well.

"I don't think Joe cares about individual awards," Gannon said. "He's always been a team guy and they wouldn't be there without him. I think he's misunderstood. A lot of people think he's aloof or he's not into it, but a lot of young players don't like to deal with the media. He's ultra-competitive, he's become one of the leaders of that football team and he's done an outstanding job."

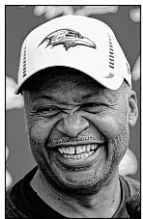

And to think Flacco went to Delaware, a school that's produced fewer than 25 NFL players and only five were quarterbacks. Scott Brunner, Jeff Komlo and Andy Hall are the other three.

Ravens' OC Caldwell still longs to be head coach

Wire reports

Jim Caldwell enjoys his job as offensive coordinator of the Baltimore Ravens, and he's quite good at it.

Before taking over in early December Caldwell had never held the position at any level — yet the Ravens' attack has flourished under his direction.

Quarterback Joe Flacco has looked sharp, the play-calling has been unpredictable and Baltimore has scored 90 points in three playoff games to earn a berth in the Super Bowl.

Caldwell's success prompted head coach John Harbaugh to ask him to retain the post in 2013. Caldwell appreciates the opportunity, but has no intention of making "Offensive Coordinator, Baltimore Ravens" the last line on his resume.

The 58-year-old Caldwell wants to be a head coach. He did it in Indianapolis from 2009-11, and is itching for another crack at the top job in his profession.

"At some point in time, if the Lord wills it, I'd love to be able to do it again," Caldwell said Friday. "But it may not happen. Everybody in our profession is looking for an opportunity to run their own program, and I'm no different than anybody else in that regard."

■ Houston running back Arian Foster says players are going to step up at the Pro Bowl this year, but don't expect 100 percent effort.

Foster said Friday after practicing with his AFC teammates that it's unrealistic to expect full effort from the NFL's top athletes when they're limited in the plays they're able to run.

Effort has emerged as the top theme for this year's Pro Bowl as NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell has made it clear the all-star game won't be played going forward if it's second-rate football.

Denver quarterback Peyton Manning says players have to play better because it would be a shame for the game to be canceled.

Manning says the NFL will lose the value of players interacting if the Pro Bowl goes away.

■ San Francisco kicker David Akers calls his struggles this season a "head scratcher" and says if the 49ers win the Super Bowl it will erase all of his 14 misses this season.

Akers missed an NFL-worst 13 field goals this season and then hit the upright on a 38-yarder in last week's NFC championship game at Atlanta. He says he feels like he is kicking the ball well and he's off by a matter of inches, which is frustrating because "an inch is a mile in our game."

Coach Jim Harbaugh brought in Billy Cundiff earlier this month to challenge Akers. But the Niners stuck with Akers and released Cundiff last week.

James: From spectator to contributor

■ After weeks of being inactive, he's now impact player for 49ers

By Josh Dubow
Associated Press

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — LaMichael James has transformed himself from a rookie spectator forced to watch the first three months of the season to a key contributor to a Super Bowl team in a matter of weeks for the San Francisco 49ers.

After being inactive the first 12 games of the season, James has become an impact player for the 49ers in their run to the Super Bowl next week against Baltimore.

His long kickoff return set up the go-ahead score in a late-season win in New England. His experience running the zone read helped Colin Kaepernick rush for 181 yards in a win to open the playoffs against Green Bay. Then James got into the scoring act himself last week, starting San Francisco's comeback in a 28-24 win over Atlanta in the NFC championship.

"I had a lot to learn," James said. "I'm still learning. I'm very blessed to be in the situation I'm in."

Fresh off scoring his first professional touchdown in last week's win over the Falcons, James is finally fulfilling the expectations the Niners had for him after drafting him in the second round last April following a stellar college career at Oregon.

"From the first time he stepped on the field, he's been dynamic," coach Jim Harbaugh said.

Getting on the field was the hard part. James was inactive the first 12 games as he had to adjust to playing from a huddle after being part of Oregon's fast-paced offense for three years and to learn a much more extensive playbook than he was used to with the Ducks.

James dutifully worked at learning his craft, making his contributions as a scout team running back and receiver and soaking in whatever tips he could get from starter Frank Gore and running backs coach Tom Rathman.

"It was very different," James said. "I'd never really been in a huddle until I was in high school. Actually, sitting in a huddle and then having to remember it — and not just run it — that was a little bit different for me, but it all works out."

after Kendall Hunter went down with a season-ending Achilles' injury in New Orleans on Nov. 25. The Niners needed a change-of-pace back to team with Gore and James proved to be a perfect fit.

James was helped by the fact that the Niners offense had changed a bit with the switch at quarterback to Kaepernick from Alex Smith, with the team using more of the read-option plays James was so proficient at in college.

"Once he started getting comfortable, we saw a dynamic football player," safety Donte Whitner said. "It's a testament to him to be able to sit on the sideline and be on the developmental squad, as we like to call it, here for so long and actually knowing that you can play football. Actually coming from a big university, playing in a lot of big games, playing a lot of big games and being a big-time player, and having to sit out and be humbled like that, that's a testament to him and the character he has."

James rushed for 5,082 yards and scored 58 touchdowns in three seasons for the Ducks, including 471 yards of offense and four touchdowns in two games against Stanford when Harbaugh ran the Cardinal.

Playing for a perennial title contender at Oregon has prepared James for the big stage of the NFL playoffs. He played in three BCS bowl games, including the national championship game against Auburn at the end of his second year in January 2011. He

Senior Bowl quarterbacks are ready for their NFL audition

Wire reports

Quarterbacks at all-star games have tough assignments.

The six Senior Bowl signal callers will be playing off cliff notes of a new offense, throwing to unfamiliar receivers and taking snaps from a new center in Saturday's NFL showcase. And they'll all do it from under center, not the shotgun for those more accustomed to the spread in college.

All the while with dozens of scouts, coaches and NFL execs studying their every move on and off the field. Not that anyone is complaining considering the potential rewards.

"It's a job interview so you've got to be ready to go when it's time to go," Syracuse's Ryan Nassib said.

That could mean a lot of money for those who deftly manage the tasks. The game might be the most relaxing part of the weeklong job fair.

West Virginia's Geno Smith, widely considered the top quarterback prospect, skipped the Senior Bowl.

That left Nassib, North

Carolina State's Mike Glennon and Zac Dysert of Miami, Ohio, as the North quarterbacks and Florida State's E.J. Manuel, Oklahoma's Landry Jones and Arkansas' Tyler Wilson on the South.

All piled up big college numbers, then had to start over on Monday.

"We're used to the first day of practice just about every ball on the ground, fumbled exchanges, all those things," said the Detroit Lions' Jim Schwartz, coach of the South team. "But from the time all three of those quarterbacks stepped into the huddle on the first day they had good command and weren't botching snaps and they were making accurate throws.

"People underestimate how difficult that is when you come into an environment like this."

The six quarterbacks bring plenty of experience to the task. They've logged an average of 10,000-plus career passing yards and 71 touchdowns led by Jones, a four-year starter who passed for 16,646 yards and 123 touchdowns for the Sooners.

■ Top administrators at Notre Dame decided within hours of hearing about the Manti Te'o dead girlfriend hoax that it did not involve a crime and within two days had concluded there was no NCAA violation, according to a letter sent by the university president to board of trustee members on Friday.

The Rev. John Jenkins told trustees that despite "the unrelenting scrutiny of hundreds of journalists and countless others — and repeated attempts by some to create a different impression — no facts relating to the hoax have been at odds with what Manti told us" on Dec. 27-28.

The letter was obtained Friday by The Associated Press from a university official who provided it on condition of anonymity because the private school's internal workings are confidential.

The eight-page document, including a four-page letter from Jenkins and a four-page outline of how Notre Dame handled the hoax, is both a defense and an explanation of the school's actions.

Advice

Talk, don't flirt, if relationship is what you desire

Dear Amy: I would like some advice on a situation that's been bothering me for quite some time. I have two best guy friends. Both of them are straight. I am gay.

They are pretty open-minded about having a gay best friend. However, both of them allow me to flirt with them insistently. Things even went to another level with one of them.

I don't know if they are playing mind games with me because they are in denial about their sexuality, or if they think my feelings are just a joke — you know, the whole “ha-ha, my gay best friend likes me” thing.

I would like to have a relationship with one of them, but at this point, if they can't be comfortable with themselves, what is the point?

— Confused But Not Really

Dear Confused: I see your situation as being analogous to one where a straight man says, “My best women friends let me come on to them and yet won't have a sexual relationship! How dare they toy with me!”

I don't really see sexuality as being the primary factor. This is more about honesty — yours and theirs.

Do you have no responsibility for your own behavior? Is “insistent flirting” the only way you know to relate to men you care about?

You seem to be toying with your friends as much as you think they are “playing” you.

It is possible that your behavior toward your friends is as confusing for them — as their reaction is baffling for you.

If you want to have a sexual relationship with your one friend, you should do something more challenging than flirting with him and passively hoping he'll reciprocate (making you angry when he doesn't) — you should be brave enough to talk to him.

Dear Amy: I'm a junior in high school, and one of my close friends recently invited me to follow her blog.

After reading her blog for a few weeks, I've come to realize that she's posting more and more about being fat (she's not, at all) and about starving herself.

I'm so worried about her. She just told me that she has clinical depression, which makes me think that this really might be serious.

I really love her and try to tell her that as often as possible, but aside from that I have no idea what to do.

I hate seeing my friend do this to herself.

— Very Worried

Dear Worried: I share your concern. Your friend's blog is at least semipublic and she is using it (I believe) as a cry for help. If she has developed an eating disorder, the sooner she gets treatment the better her chance for recovery.

I urge you to notify responsible adults at school (your school nurse and the school counselor) and your parents about what you are reading on your friend's blog.

She needs adult help and intervention. You are a very good friend to care so much and for being willing to act on your concerns.

Dear Amy: The letter from “Cranky Dad” made me mad. He “can't stand it when kids, teenagers, young adults and older male adults wear baseball caps into homes, restaurants and other buildings.”

May I suggest that some who do so do it not because they are unaware of the accepted custom of removing their hats, nor are they trying to flaunt societal rules.

Would Cranky insist that someone whose eyes are particularly sensitive to the glare of overhead lights get his permission before being allowed to protect them with a billed cap?

Or patients undergoing chemotherapy? Or those with disfiguring scars on their heads that they prefer to hide?

Of course Cranky should be allowed to dress in a way that he feels is appropriate for the situation, but to impose his tastes on others across the board is insensitive.

— Bernice

Dear Bernice: Readers are beating up “Cranky Dad” with testimonials similar to yours, but to be fair to him, he seemed mainly concerned by the males in his own household, over whom he evidently has no authority.

Schools can benefit from ‘boxtops for education’ coupons

Dear Heloise: I'd like to suggest to your readers to ask their school-age children if their school collects and uses “box tops for education” coupons. These are found on many products and earn money to buy necessary school supplies. Schools that use these will be grateful for more.

Also, I've always had difficulty trying to measure, cut and apply shelf paper. My hint has been very helpful for me. I bought self-sticking vinyl floor tiles.

They are easy to measure and cut with a box cutter; plus, they are easy to wipe clean. I now have my shelves and drawers lined with vinyl. Works great!

Keep up your great column in the San Antonio Express-News. I really enjoy reading every one of them.

— Patsy F. Shinn in San Antonio

Dear Patsy: I'm glad you enjoy my column. I'm happy to pass along your hint about the box tops! Readers, start saving them, and give them to the school of your choice.

— Heloise

Dear Readers: Dorothy Shaulis in the Shanksville/Berlin area of Pennsylvania sent a photo of her beautiful blue point Siamese cat that she adopted from a shelter two years ago.

Dorothy says: “She was about 9 months old when we adopted her. She loves to crawl under the covers on the bed in my sewing room and take her afternoon nap. She does this herself. I walked in one afternoon, saw her sleeping and ran to get my camera. She is a real sweetie, and I love her!”

To see this “sleeping beauty,” visit my website, www.Heloise.com, and click on “Pets.” — Heloise

Dear Heloise: After purchasing many artificial flowers for table decorations at a fundraiser, the question was how to secure the flowers in their paper-bag “vases.”

At our local dollar store, we got cans of play clay, which were perfect to weight the flowers. Afterward, we put the lids back on and stored everything for the next party (although one volunteer kept a couple for her grandchildren!).

Another hint: I travel with a small bath towel. The towel has been used as a lightweight blanket for a nap, a “picnic blanket,” to dry washed items and to lie on while doing floor exercises.

Hypothyroid does increase likelihood of trigger finger

Dear Dr. Roach: I have been taking thyroid medication for 15 years. Ten months ago, I had a normal TSH level. Last week it was slightly low.

During this period I developed trigger finger on the middle digit of both hands. I went to an orthopedic surgeon, who asked if I am hypothyroid, and at the time I said no.

My question is twofold: Does the drop in my TSH signify hypothyroid? And is it possible to develop trigger finger due to hypothyroidism? My doctor said he'd never heard of it. I wondered if I should change my dosage of thyroid to see if this helps my hands, but my doctor said no. I am a potter, and my hands need to be strong to work on the wheel.

— J.R.

Dear J.R.: Trigger finger is a condition where the tendon to the finger gets stuck in its sheath, sometimes painfully. It usually is treated by an orthopedic surgeon with an injection, although it sometimes needs surgery. Hypothyroidism does make this condition more likely, but there isn't a consensus on why it happens. Untreated hypothyroidism can cause swelling in soft tissues, and this may be the problem.

A study recently showed that the antibody present in Hashimoto's thyroiditis, the most common cause of hypothyroidism, is strongly correlated with trigger finger.

You are being treated for hypothyroidism, so the correct answer to the surgeon was “Yes, and I am on replacement therapy.” However, a low TSH blood test means that the thyroid replacement is greater than needed. TSH is the hormone made in your pituitary gland that tells your thyroid gland in your neck how much hormone to make.

A high TSH means there's low thyroid in the blood, so the thyroid should make more. Because your TSH was slightly low, if your doctor were to make any change, it would be to slightly decrease the dose of replacement hormone.

Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Jan. 26). You'll forge a path in love in the next seven weeks. It's either a rebirth for an ailing relationship or a fresh page with someone new. In February you'll give a stellar performance. The reputation you earn turns into money. March brings the financial stability you seek. Family business requires deft handling in June. Virgo and Scorpio adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 1, 11, 18 and 14.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). There's an outpouring of emotion around you and you're likely to get caught up in the theatrics of it. Keep in mind that feelings are never wrong or right. They just are.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You only want your loved ones to be happy and yet that's something you can't really control. What you can do is set the scene and be the example you want to see from them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You'll master the fine art of encouragement. You'll make loved ones feel at once comforted and challenged. You'll bring out their best qualities, as well as qualities they didn't even know they had.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Can you stay home and steer clear of the full moon madness? Well, you could — but where's the fun in that? Go out and be with the people you live so close to but know nothing about.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). The full moon in your sign offers you a glow of glamour that no amount of styling could give. The less you try, the more you wind up winning someone's fascination.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). A special connection is building. Talking too much can break the spell. You could be moved to do a number of other things instead, for instance: cook, dance and laugh.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). There were so many celebrations last month that you went into January feeling all partied out. For the first time in weeks you genuinely feel like letting loose and living it up again.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Interesting confessions and declarations will come out in your presence. There are many ways to interpret what is said, but your way will be the most accurate. You might want to keep it to yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You can't influence a realm that you're not an active participant in. So you'll mix, mingle and be part of the craziness. This is par for the course, and you'll have a great deal of fun with it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Artists and photographers know that how you frame a piece can almost as crucial to the overall effect as the piece itself. You'll keep this in mind as you share information.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The one who loves you may do so with such fervor that you're not sure you want to be so adored. Try and sneak away for a break to recharge and get perspective.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The world can seem huge and cold, but you take comfort in it anyway because you know that there's a place where you belong. In moments of uncertainty, you offer this same feeling of belonging to others.

Seashells remind us how God lovingly created our world

Everyone deserves to get away and live it up now and then. That is just what my brother John, sister Brucie Farris, and I did two weeks ago as we traveled to Jacksonville, Fla. We spent five days in a Holiday Inn suite overlooking the northeastern coast.

After spending the night in Nashville and dropping my nephew, Aaron, off at the airport for a late-morning flight to Boston where he is in school, we were finally on our way. We made excellent time, arriving in Jacksonville Beach about 7:30 their time. After driving all day, I was exhausted, to say the least.

Having a good night's sleep, I was all charged up and ready to meet the day. Our fifth-floor suite faced the beach, and I just loved going and sitting out on the balcony with my coffee and just watching all the people as they walked the beach. I was perfectly content just sitting there sipping on my beverage, with a good book, just taking in the sights and sounds that surrounded me.

BILLY EDWARDS

But I didn't stay there for long. Soon my solace was broken when Brucie came to get me and rolled me in my wheelchair down to the pool.

While we sat there just soaking up the rays, up walks Kelli, my niece who lives in Jacksonville and the reason we chose this place to spend our winter vacation. She was out running and walking her dog, Cain, when we first saw her.

While we were there, we had another guest as my sister, Jan, drove up from Tampa to spend two days and nights with us.

It was like having a vacation and family reunion all rolled up in one! I don't get to see either Jan or Kelli that often, so it was a delight spending some quality time with them.

Down the walkway there was a pier that I loved to go out on. It extends a good way out into the ocean. It costs a dollar to get onto it, but it's well worth it.

You see all kinds of people from all walks of life out there walking the pier on any given day. As my brother or sister pushed me in my chair up and down the pier, we saw people with their fishing poles just waiting patiently for the next big one to bite.

I enjoyed going all the way out to the end of the pier, where they have special lower rails for the handicapped, and pulling myself up and looking at all the starfish and sea life swimming in the cool, crisp waters below.

It truly boggles the mind when you think about all the different kinds of life that live and make their habitat in the sea. How can man consider all of the life that the sea holds and so often fail to acknowledge the Supreme Being who created it?

It just didn't come about by accident or take place on its own. Oh, no, my friends, all these things we marveled at and which take our breath away are more than freaks of nature. They were all made to capture our imagination by God Himself.

One day John went walking out on the beach and brought a bag of shells back to the hotel, put it on the table where I was sitting and said, "Here, the subject of your next column!"

They come in all colors, shapes and sizes, but no two are exactly the same. In just one bag, you have some that are gray, rust, shades of silver, spotted, big ones, little ones, snail-shaped ones, coiled ones and it goes on and on.

They are never-ending. You would think, considering how many people collect shells, that there would eventually be no more to be picked up.

But they are just as plentiful as they ever were and there to be picked up by anyone to hold, behold, wonder and admire any time they need a little inspiration.

The Psalmist David asks, "What is man that you would take thought of him, or the son of man that you care for us" (Ps. 8:4). When you are walking through life thinking that no one cares, consider this: The God of all creation knows me! He knows my name and everything about me!

He knows my needs and what I'm going through. He will help me and protect me. He will be my guide and lead me where He wants me to go. He will give me the strength to do what I need to do and will turn my sorrow into joy.

You can place you trust in the Lord with confidence and the full assurance that

He will not fail or disappoint you.

You can know that He will be there for you when other people can't or won't be. They can let you down, but He never will.

Isaiah asked the question, "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Even though she may forget, yet I will not forget" (49:15). The next verse says, "Behold, I have graven thee on the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me."

The Lord could not forget us even if He tried. We are always in His thoughts and on His mind.

I rejoice in the fact that I don't have to be afraid, that we don't have to live in fear, but we live with confidence knowing that He walks with us no matter where life may lead us. It can never take us anywhere that He hasn't already been.

Until next week — God bless.

Pope urges use of social media to spread faith, information

The Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Pope Benedict XVI put church leaders on notice Thursday, saying social networking sites like Facebook and Twitter aren't a virtual world they can ignore, but rather a real world they must engage if they want to spread the faith to the next generation.

The 85-year-old Benedict, who tweets in nine languages, used his annual message on social communications to stress the potential of social media for the church as it struggles to keep followers and attract new ones amid religious apathy, competition from other churches and scandals that have driven the faithful away.

Archbishop Claudio

Maria Celli, head of the Vatican's communications office, cited a 2012 study commissioned by U.S. bishops that found that 53 percent of Americans were unaware of any significant presence of the Catholic Church online.

Other studies, Celli said, made clear that the "millennial generation" of people born after 1982 use Facebook, Twitter and YouTube far more than their parents as primary sources of information, entertainment and sharing political views and community issues.

"The digital environment is not a parallel or purely virtual world, but is part of the daily experience of many people, especially the young," Benedict said in his message.

"The Freedom of Forgiveness"

An old man on his deathbed wanted to make things right with a former friend before he died so he sent for him. When he arrived, the old man shared his fear of going into eternity without having forgiven him.

Then, with great effort, the old man managed to offer an apology for all he had ever done. His friend smiled, thanked him, and turned to leave the hospital room. But as he opened the door to leave, the old man hollered, "But remember, if I get better, this doesn't count!"

Many of us struggle with forgiveness. Sometimes the emotional pain runs so deep we may wonder if we'll ever be able to forgive.

In Matthew 18:21-35, Jesus tells a story about a servant who owes his master an astronomical debt that he would never be able to repay. His master, rather than demanding payment, graciously chooses to forgive the servant's debt.

Now forgiven, the servant goes out and finds someone who owes him a very small debt by comparison. But rather than forgiving as he himself had just been forgiven, the servant demands full payment. When the servant's master hears about this, he is furious and punishes the servant for his unforgiving spirit. Astonished, the master asks the servant: "Shouldn't you have had mercy on your fellow servant just as I had on you?"

That probing question highlights God's expectation that Christians forgive as they themselves have been forgiven. Paul makes the same point in Ephesians 4:32: "Be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, just as God in Christ forgave you."

If we have experienced God's forgiveness through faith in Jesus Christ, then we know what it means to have a huge debt dismissed. God freely forgives our sins through Christ's death on the cross. We are empowered to forgive by looking to the cross and remembering what God has done for us.

Someone said, "Forgiveness is the key that unlocks the door of resentment and the handcuffs of hate. It is a power that breaks the chains of bitterness and the shackles of selfishness."

How can Christians be free from the bondage of bitterness and resentment? Look to Calvary's cross and remember how God freely forgave your sins against him. Then, on that basis, choose to forgive those who have sinned against you. Experience the freedom of forgiveness.

BILLY GRAHAM
COLUMNIST

Friend wrong when he says he's perfect

Dear Rev. Graham: I have a friend who says he thinks he's already achieved perfection, because he doesn't know of any sins he commits now. Do you think that's possible? How can we become perfect?

— N.R.

Dear N.R.: You and I will never be perfect in this life; as long as we live on this earth we'll still be sinners, and our ability to commit sin will always be with us.

The Bible warns, "If we claim to be without sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us" (1 John 1:8).

I don't doubt your friend's sincerity; he may well be a good person, especially when compared with people who aren't so good.

But God isn't only concerned with our outward actions. God is also concerned about what goes on inside of us — with our motives and our inner thoughts. Are we ever jealous of others?

Do we ever covet something for ourselves? Are we ever tempted to say something that's hurtful or not quite true? Do we love others the way Jesus does?

Only in heaven will we be perfect and without sin, because only in heaven will we become like Christ.

The Bible says, "We know that when he appears, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is" (1 John 3:2). That should be a great encouragement to us, because it reminds us that someday our burden of sin will be destroyed.

Does this mean we shouldn't seek to become more like Christ? No, of course not.

At the beginning of each day, ask God to help you have the attitude and character of Christ in all you do and think and say.

Like the Apostle Paul, ask God every day to help you "press on toward the goal ... heavenward in Christ Jesus" (Philippians 3:14).

University seeks abuse guidance

The Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Bob Jones University is asking an outside Christian organization that deals with child abuse to investigate how the fundamentalist college responds to abuse allegations.

Trustees at the Greenville Christian university agreed earlier this month to the investigation, which will include recommendations on how to better deal with any future abuse allegations. The investigation will include Bob Jones Academy, which teaches students from preschool to 12th grade.

School officials say the investigation was prompted by heartbreaking revelations of sexual abuse in secular and Christian organizations. The investigation will review how it responds to students who say they were abused before coming to the school or outside its campus as well.

The investigation will be handled by an organization called GRACE, which stands for Godly Response to Abuse in the Christian Environment.

Cancer survivor uses magic act to promote gospel

■ Bone marrow donor registry also gets boost

By Andrea McCann
Washington Times-Herald

WASHINGTON, Ind. — For the past three years, local magician Daniel Cullen has directed the Maze, a mystery performance that features a unique brand of mentalism not seen in typical magic shows.

He also writes, performs for, and sometimes hosts, the show, which is billed as an experience that presents a unique blend of illusion, intuition, psychology, humor, mystery and danger.

With founder and magician Jim Munroe and magician Zak Mirzadeh, Cullen produces about two shows a week on college campuses. Last year during summer break the Maze went to London, Brussels and Berlin. In November, the three men performed on a cruise hosted by Christian radio station KLOVE, and they did three TV spots last year.

But the Maze isn't just about entertainment. About 1,000 students a week on college campuses across the nation sign up free at their show for Be The Match, a national bone marrow donor registry.

"For the most part, Jim is the main performer of the show and it's based around his experience with cancer," Cullen told the Washington Times-Herald (<http://bit.ly/W5ixGF>). "We work with Be The Match because of that. We're the number one recruiters for Be the Match."

"Jim is a Christian who shares his testimony throughout the show."

Munroe also shares his story for I Am Second, an international movement designed to introduce the idea of restructuring life to put God and others first and self second.

In his testimony, Munroe explains he was diagnosed with a rare form of leukemia that would continue to come back after every remission. Doctors wanted to do a bone-marrow transplant, but Munroe's biological sister wasn't a close enough match.

They checked the 7-million-person bone marrow registry and came up with 16 possible matches; of those, there was one perfect match. A 19-year-old female was brave enough to give him what he needed to live, he said. Munroe first had chemotherapy to kill his cancerous blood cells.

"I was literally dying a death and then they brought that bag of blood into the room," he said. "The whole process was to get that new blood inside of me. Everyone was hoping my body would accept the new blood, and it did. And it slowly began to build a new immune system."

Now Munroe is 100 percent cancer free and has written a book, called "The Charlatan," about his experience. He describes it as the "true story of a Christian magician."

Before his life-threatening ordeal, Munroe was skeptical about God's existence. He said he asked God to reveal himself to him. During his treatment, he said, he kept hearing phrases about being born anew and being like a baby in the womb phrases he recalled from scripture.

"My life with Jesus has completely changed as a result of my darkest hour, and I'm actually thankful for having to go through it," Munroe said in his testimony.

"I'm thankful about who God is and what He did for me."

Cullen said the Maze shows are free, and he, Munroe and Mirzadeh do two or three hours of "street magic" beforehand to get people interested in attending. Cullen described street magic as card and coin tricks in the style of magician David Blaine.

Because Maze is not-for-profit, various organizations such as Cru (formerly Campus Crusade for Christ) raise money to bring them in. Anyone interested in partnering with Maze can contact Cullen at dan@whatisthemaze.com to find out more.

"Jim and Zak also raise support all year long to pay expenses," Cullen said. "We're getting a lot of recognition. His story is a very powerful story, and people are wanting to hear more about it. I would love to do something at one of the churches here, have his book and do a book signing."

Massachusetts is an insurance role model

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON — When Massachusetts adopted its landmark health care law in 2006, the goals were ambitious and the potential solutions complex.

More than 90 percent of its residents already had health insurance, but the state hoped to cover nearly everyone by plugging as many holes as possible in its system, short of a so-called single payer option.

What resulted was a state law that became the blueprint for the 2010 federal Affordable Care Act signed by President Barack Obama.

Now, as other states begin grappling with the intricacies of the federal health care overhaul, many are looking for lessons from the largely successful Massachusetts model as well as from its limitations and remaining challenges.

Officials from Wisconsin, Minnesota, Colorado, West Virginia and Rhode Island have worked with Jonathan Gruber, an MIT economics professor who helped craft both the state and federal laws, to set up their exchanges.

What are they getting in return? A guide to a law that has resulted in more people visiting doctors, more employees getting coverage through their jobs and an increase of insured residents to 98 percent, far above the national average, including virtually all children and senior citizens. That's an additional 400,000 people with insurance since the law took effect.

Other states would also do well to note the difficulties resulting from the law: a shortage of primary care doctors, which is expected to be an unintended consequence of the federal law, and an increase in the number of procedures that insurers were required to pay for, which raised costs.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dr. Richard Dupee takes the blood pressure of patient Stella Frabotta, of Wellesley, Mass., in Dupee's Wellesley office. Dupee, a primary care physician and solo practitioner with a subspecialty in geriatrics, said the 2006 Massachusetts health care law had plusses and minuses.

Massachusetts' law, written for a state that is relatively richer and more highly educated than others, won't be a perfect fit for any other state, of course. But the experiences resulting from the law have played out on personal levels universal to all 50 states — in doctor's offices, at kitchen tables and in human resource departments.

Among those most directly affected were the uninsured who had relied on care from emergency rooms, the cost of which was borne by hospitals and taxpayers. The law's top objective was to get those people into health plans. A system was created to subsidize care for people earning less than three times the poverty level and design lower-cost private plans for those earning more.

For Valerie Spain, the overhaul proved to be a lifesaver. She was underemployed in 2011 and no longer able to extend her insurance coverage from her previous job, an option that had been costing her $550 a month.

The 57-year-old former operations manager found insurance through the new subsidized program. She pays a $20 co-pay for visits to her doctor's office but no premiums.

Without the insurance, Spain said she doesn't know how she would keep her diabetes under control.

"I'm sure I would have had to be rationing my medication," she said.

The influx of such new patients is good for those who finally have insurance, but it's been tough on doctors, said Richard Dupee, a 67-year-old primary care doctor and chief of geriatrics service at Tufts Medical Center. He said many have declined to accept patients on the subsidized plans because the reimbursement rates are not as good as private plans.

"If you nickel and dime the doctors, they are not going to take the insurance," said Dupee, who has been in practice for more than 30 years and teaches at Tufts University School of Medicine.

The state also faces a shortage of primary care doctors, Dupee said, making it harder for the newly insured to get an appointment. He said the bulk of his students are heading into subspecialties, with few choosing primary care.

Just half of primary care doctors were taking new patients last year, and average times for new patients seeking appointments with the doctors remained long — 45 days, up from 36 days the year before, a Massachusetts Medical Society survey found.

In this April 12, 2006 file photo, Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, right, shakes hands with Massachusetts Health and Human Services Secretary Timothy Murphy after signing into law a landmark bill designed to guarantee that virtually all Massachusetts residents have health insurance at Faneuil Hall in Boston. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., is center, and Massachusetts House Speaker Salvatore DiMasi, is at right. The Massachusetts law provides a model for the rest of the nation as states work to establish their own health exchanges in 2013.

"If you are going to insure everyone, you have to make sure that you have doctors to care for those people," Dupee added.

Another struggle for Massachusetts has been its attempts to curb the costs of the law, said Lora Pellegrini, president of the Massachusetts Association of Health Plans. She faulted lawmakers for mandating that insurers cover more procedures and medicine, including hearing aids, oral cancer drugs and an assessment to help pay for the state's childhood vaccine program.

"To ultimately be sustainable, we have to address the costs," she said.

The state has worked to do so. In August, Gov.

Deval Patrick signed a bill intended to save Massachusetts up to $200 billion over 15 years by encouraging a system that rewards doctors and hospitals for keeping patients healthy rather than paying piecemeal for every operation or treatment.

Employers must also brace for changes. In Massachusetts, businesses with 11 or more full-time workers were required make a "fair and reasonable" contribution to their workers' health insurance or pay a fee.

One key to the success of any health care law is to connect with people in their neighborhoods or at home to explain the law and get them enrolled, said Brian Rosman, research director for the advocacy group Health Care for All.

For example, residents need to be made aware of the individual mandate, which requires virtually everyone be insured or pay a tax penalty. Massachusetts was the first state to impose the mandate, and the federal law also includes one.

About 170,000 people in the state said they were uninsured in 2010, but about two-thirds did not report enough in income and were exempt from the tax penalty.

Of the rest, there are plenty of reasons why someone might be penalized rather than have insurance, said Rosman.

Sometimes it might be due to the difficulty of reaching out to Spanish- and Portuguese-speaking populations. In other cases, he said, some people are simply philosophically opposed to being told by the government to get insurance.

The number of people assessed the penalty has fallen steadily since the law was passed, from 67,000 in 2007, the first year the mandate took effect, to 44,000 in 2010.

Rejecting 'Obamacare' comes with some risks

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Governors who reject health insurance for the poor under the federal health care overhaul could wind up in a politically awkward position on immigration: A quirk in the law means some U.S. citizens would be forced to go without coverage, while legal immigrants residing in the same state could still get it.

It's an unintended consequence of how last year's Supreme Court decision changed the Medicaid provisions of President Barack Obama's health care law. The overhaul expanded the federal-state program for low-income and disabled people. The Supreme Court made the Medicaid expansion optional for states, which complicated things.

Arizona officials called attention to the problem last week, when Republican Gov. Jan Brewer opted to accept the Medicaid expansion.

Brewer had been a leading opponent of the overhaul, and her decision got widespread attention. State budget documents cited the immigration glitch as one of her reasons.

"If Arizona does not expand, for poor Arizonans below (the federal poverty line), only legal immigrants, but not citizens, would be eligible for subsidies," the documents said.

That's because the immigrants would be eligible for government-subsidized private insurance, while low-income citizens would not. The Obama administration confirmed Arizona's interpretation.

The gist of what Brewer was saying is that "by rejecting the expansion, you are essentially rewarding the immigrant population at the expense of full citizens," said Matt Salo, executive director of the National Association of Medicaid Directors, a nonpartisan group that represents the states in Washington.

It could take some explaining for Texas Gov. Rick Perry, steadfastly opposed to what foes dismiss as "Obamacare," and for Florida Gov. Rick Scott, who is reassessing his position. Both states have large numbers of uninsured citizens and legal immigrants.

"I think politicians will be under a lot of pressure not to create these sorts of inequities," said Jennifer Ng'andu, a health policy expert with the National Council of La Raza, one of the major Latino advocacy groups.

Today in history

The Associated Press

Today is Saturday, Jan. 26, the 26th day of 2013. There are 339 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Jan. 26, 1788, the first European settlers in Australia, led by Capt. Arthur Phillip, landed in present-day Sydney.

On this date:

In 1784, in a letter to his daughter Sally, Benjamin Franklin expressed unhappiness over the choice of the eagle as the symbol of America, and stated his own preference: the turkey.

In 1962, the United States launched Ranger 3 to land scientific instruments on the moon — but the probe ended up missing its target by more than 22,000 miles.

Charles "Lucky" Luciano, a leading Mafia figure in the U.S., died in Naples, Italy, at age 64.

In 1973, actor Edward G. Robinson died in Los Angeles at age 79.

In 1979, former Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller died in New York at age 70.

In 1998, President Bill Clinton forcefully denied having an affair with a former White House intern, telling reporters, "I did not have sexual relations with that woman, Miss Lewinsky."

Ten years ago: The Tampa Bay Buccaneers won their first NFL championship, routing the Oakland Raiders 48-21 in Super Bowl XXXVII (37). Andre Agassi beat Germany's Rainer Schuettler 6-2, 6-2, 6-1 in the Australian Open final.

Five years ago: Christian Brando, the troubled eldest son of the late actor Marlon Brando, died in Los Angeles at age 49. Radical PLO leader George Habash died in Amman, Jordan, at age 81.

One year ago: Capping three days of mourning, some 12,000 people paid tribute to the late Joe Paterno in a campus memorial service that exposed a strong undercurrent of anger over his firing. Actor Robert Hegyes, 60, died in Edison, N.J.
